NEW BERNE, N. C., JULY 24 1885.

GENERAL GRANT is dead. He died at Mt. McGregor, New York, at 8:08 a. m. on the 23d inst. He has suffered long from cancer of the tongue and finally passed away peacefully. His success as a military commander, and being fortunately at the head of the army at the close of the war between the States, is the foundation for his fame. He will probably pass into history as one of the greatest military heroes of the times; but his administration of the civil affairs of the government will not compare favorably with that of WASHINGTON, ADAMS, JEFFERSON, JACKSON nor of his immediate predecessors. Other Generals in the Federal army may have been his equal or even his superior in military genius, but to him fell the good fortune of success, and history will doubtless do him full justice.

NEW BERNE AND HER FUTURE.

In former articles on this subject we have alluded to the political condition of Craven county, and the effect of having no representation in the General Assembly that the dominant party would hear. For this reason the rights and interest of the people of this county are often ignored. There seems to be a disposition to sever the Democrats of this county from their neighbors and natural allies and punish them because they live in a county largely Republican. Such action on the part of the party which we had reason to look to for help has had a depressing effect upon our people, and unless they look more to the shaping of their immediate local affairs and determine to send men to the General Assembly who will be heard, this depression and despondency will continue.

But while we are suffering this injustice at the hands of our political friends let us not altogether neglect our commercial and business relations with our sister adjoining counties. Our business men should bestir themselves in matters of freight rates and carrying facilities, and see that rival towns do not gain advantages over them in these things. Quick and cheap transportation are things essential to the commercial growth of a city. But the one great thing needed now to draw the people of this section together and make a united effort to develop their resources is an Agricultural Fair. We have called attention to this several times, but our people seem to want to wait for a more prosperous season. Here is where they make a mistake. A united effort on the part of the people of New Berne and the farmers of this county would give us a Fair second to none in the State.

A generation has grown up in this section since we had an Agricultural Fair. The time is ripe for it. All we need is concert of action. The great benefit that will redound to New Berne by holding a Fair here annually, and to the farmers by mingling together and exhibiting their farm products and stock, need not be discussed here, for it is apparent to every intelligent reader.

Small Industries—A Lesson that the South Learns all too Slowly.

Things that We Buy from the North that We Ought to Make at Home.

Charleston News and Courier

The establishment of a new "bent-wood furniture" factory in Columbia recently has given several prominent northern journals a text for sermons upon the existing necessity for the manufacture of small goods, notions, and knick-knacks by the southern people for home consumption. The discussion of this subject is, I am pleased to see, extending in this direction, and it is to be hoped practical results will ensue. Nowhere are conditions more favorable for the cheap production of the hundreds of articles that are now imported here from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Boston, and from the great manufacturing cities of the West. The editor of a prominent North Carolina paper says:

"We sleep on northern beds and on woven wire springs from Connecticut, our eyes open in the morning upon Yankee bureaus, Yankee carpets, Yankee wall paper and Yankee paint. We eat from Yankee plates (using Connecticut-made knives and forks) and our food is cooked upon Cincinnati stoves. Many of us burn Pennsylvania coal. We die between northern-made sheets, are placed in northern and western coffins and are deposited in a grave dug with a Yankee spade or shovel. We make for sale—alas!—only cotton, with which we must pay for the thousand and one things we buy from the North. Instead of having our own meat and breadstuffs we buy it at high prices from the North and give in exchange the cotton for which we get a low price. Today we see in our stores northern apples; today we buy from our provision men Baltimore cabbages; we use oleomargarine and Goshen (N. Y.) butter, for which we pay exorbitant prices, although we have fine lands adapted to cattle-raising. We build railroads and send North for rails and engines, and although we have thousands of marble quarries (undeveloped) nearly all our tombstones come from Vermont. In short, we furnish the money hard earned by the raising of cotton, and the shrewd Yankee manufacturers are constantly making a profit."

The writer of this graphic resume might, very truthfully, have added that just so long as the people of Dixie sit down and wait, like Micawber, for something to turn up, just so long will the condition of affairs described continue. It is in the little things that the Yankees excel. For instance, the crop of dried apples in Pennsylvania in 1884 was valued at over $330,000; the dried blackberry and raspberry crop of New York State exceeded in value $500,000. This is but one small item, and yet who would think, here in South Carolina, of drying berries or fruit for the market? "No," the farmers say, "it ain't worth while; the crops 'll be good this year, I reckon," and so it goes. The total valuation, estimated by H. K. & F. B. Thurber, of New York, of dried fruits in New England and the Middle States last year was a little over $6,000,000. About one third of this fruit was shipped South.

What Family Government Is.

It is not to watch children with suspicious eye, to frown at the outburts of innocent hilarity, to suppress their joyous laughter, and to mould them into melancholic little models of aged gravity. And when they have been in fault it is not simply to punish them on account of the personal injury that you have chanced to suffer in consequence. Nor is it to overwhelm the little culprit with angry words; to stun him with a deafening noise; to call him by hard names, which do not express his misdeeds; to load him with epithets which would be extravagant if applied to a fault of tenfold enormity; or to declare with passionate vehemence that he is the worst child in the world and destined for the gallows. But it is to watch anxiously for the first risings of sin, and to repress them; to counteract the earliest working of selfishness; to repress the first beginnings of rebellion against rightful authority; to teach an implicit and unquestioning and cheerful obedience to the will of the parent, as the best preparation for a future allegiance to the requirements of the civil magistrate, and the law of the great Ruler and Father in heaven. It is to punish a fault because it is sinful and contrary to the commands of God, without reference to whether it may or may not be productive of immediate injury to the parent or others. It is to reprove with calmness and composure, and not with angry irritation; in a few words fitly chosen, and not with a torrent of abuse; to punish as often as you threaten, and threaten only when you intend and can remember to perform; to say what you mean, and infallibly do as you say. It is to govern your family as in the sight of Him who gave you authority, and who will reward your strict fidelity with such blessings as he bestowed on Abraham, or punish your criminal neglect with such curses as he visited on Eli.—Sel.

"Imanenjana."

In looking over a volume the other day that contained accounts of different manias that have taken hold of nations in past years, says a writer in the Pittsburgh Dispatch, I came across the following, which I submit to the consideration of roller skaters and other interested parties:

In the month of February, 1863, the Europeans resident at Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, began to hear rumors of a new disease, which it was said had appeared in the west or southwest. The name given to it by the natives was "imanenjana," and the dancers were called "ramanjana," which probably comes from a root signifying to make tense. The name did not convey any idea of its nature, and the accounts given of it were so vague as to mystify rather than enlighten. After a time, however, it reached the capital, and in the month of March began to be common. At first parties of two or three were to be seen, accompanied by musicians and other attendants, dancing in the public places; and in a few weeks these had increased to hundreds, so that one could not go out of doors without meeting bands of these dancers. It spread rapidly, as by a sort of infection, even to the remote villages in the central province of Imerina; so that, having occasion to visit a distant part of the country in company with an Englishman, we found, even in remote hamlets, and, more wonderful still, near solitary cottages, the sound of music, indicating that the mania had spread even there.

The rapidity of this spread was certainly remarkable, but not to be compared with what is related of the outbreak of the child pilgrimage, of Erfort, when on the 15th of July, 1237, 1,000 children assembled, as if by instinctive impulse, without preconcert, and unknown to their parents.

The dancing was regulated very much by the music, which was the quickest possible. The patients were fond of carrying sugarcanes about with them. They held them in their hands or carried them over their shoulders while they danced. Frequently, too, they might be seen going through their singular evolutions with a bottle of water upon their heads, which they succeeded wonderfully in balancing. The drum was the favorite instrument of music, but others were used, and all were acceptable.

The disease was rarely fatal; still a few cases of death undoubtedly happened, and these only occurred, so far as the writer is aware, where the patient was restrained from joining in the dances. It would seem that these persons actually died from pent-up passion or excitement. The dancing, no doubt, was so far salutary. The music served to regulate and control the wild muscular movements that might otherwise have proved injurious. A most remarkable fact is, that the mere physical exercise, prodigious and long continued as it is in this disease, seems perfectly harmless, and we know of no fatality connected therewith.

Deaf and Blind.

How an Atlanta Woman Was Made to See and Hear.

AN INTERESTING STORY.

Miss Minnie Wallace resides with Mrs. George Fickland, 11 McAfee street, Atlanta, Ga., and from her own lips a Constitution reporter learned the following appalling story.

Several months ago she became almost totally blind and deaf, and could not taste anything except salt. Her bones became the seat of intense pain, her joints were swollen and painful, and eventually her whole body and limbs became covered with splotches and small sores. Her appetite failed, and she gradually lost flesh and strength, and had but little use of herself, as her limbs and muscles were paralyzed.

All treatment from physicians and the use of medicines seemed powerless. Her disease was blood poison and rheumatism.

As she now seemed well and hearty the reporter asked what wrought such a wonderful change.

"I used a medicine recommended by a friend," she replied, "and before one bottle had been taken I began to see and hear. The second bottle relieved all rheumatic pains and improved my appetite. When I had completed the use of six bottles my eyesight and hearing were fully restored, sense of taste returned, all splotches disappeared, sores all healed, and my strength and flesh restored."

"What was the medicine?" asked the reporter.

"Swift's Blood Balm—S. S. S.—was the great remedy that acted so powerfully on my disease and cured me. I never experienced any unpleasant symptoms from its use, and its action is so quiet that it surprises all."

The reporter then sought a physician who knew the case, who confirmed he handed us the following lines:

"I examined the above case of blood poison and rheumatism, before and after being cured, and certify to the main facts as above stated, and must acknowledge that the B. B. B. effected a most wonderful cure in this well-known case."
