THE JOURNAL.

NEW BERNE, N. C., JAN. 8, 1885.

Time Properly Valued.

One of the most interesting points in the character of Frank Hatton, the young naturalist who was accidentally killed while making explorations in Borneo, is his appreciation of the value of time.

He declared it to be the duty of every one to see as much of the world, and to do as much in it, as is possible, in the short period allotted to humanity. "Time flies" was the motto which urged him to exertion. A young man when he died, he had shown the greatest promise for the future, and this because he uniformly acted upon his determination to make the most of every moment belonging to the present.

"As gets to the bottom of things; he can't help it," said one who knew him at what might have been called the beginning of his career. "If there is anything in Borneo, he will find it."

Moreover, he had no time to waste in complaints or worry. Not at all accustomed to the hardships of travel in uncivilized lands, he met privation and annoyances with a cheerful spirit, eating his rice, day in and day out, as if he were quite content with the unvarying native diet.

During his residence in England, and while he was still very young, he received an unexpected rebuff from an editor, whom he had unintentionally offended. After the momentary vexation had passed, he could say with a smile:

"Little things will never bother me. One hasn't time!"

He was not in the least, however, what healthy and fun loving young people call "a pig." His father, a loving biographer, declares he had no time to waste, simply because, "when he was not working, he was playing, and he did both with all his might. He entered into his recreations with the same energy that characterized him at work."

In the sports and healthful amusements of young men, he distinguished himself as signally as in his scientific studies. For certain things he could find time, for genuine work and genuine play; but for indolent lounging, which is like a mental and moral opium habit, life was too short and too precious.

Better than Real Estate

There are very few investments better than life insurance, but we know of one that is, and that is a policy in

THE FIDELITY MUTUAL LIFE ASSOC'N OF PHILADELPHIA.

The policy can be bought at the rate of $2.40 for $500.00. It needs no cultivation or repairs, and the yearly tax on it, levied tri-annually, is not as much as the tax on real estate of like value. Upon the death of the owner, the policy does not require appraisers, administrators and lawyers to determine its value, but is payable at once without expense to the beneficiary named therein.

The payment of each policy is guaranteed by nearly $10,000,000 of assets, including a reserve fund of $30,000,000, and cash assets of nearly $50,000.

The Association owns its own building, and employs enough officers to have its rent free. Its expenses are limited to fixed annual dues. Incorporated, December, 1878. Home Office, 111 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
