The Cetton Factory,

The lot on which is situated the cotton factory, including building and machinery, was sold at auction yesterday, and knocked down to Mr. J. A. Meadows at five thousand dollars. The first cost of this property, we understand, was about thirty thousand dollars. We have also been informed that new machinery of the very latest improvement, can now be put in the mill for about five thousand dollars.

We have no idea as to what Mr. Meadows intends doing with it, but it seems to us that now is a most opportune time to start a cotton factory there on a paying basis. Will not some of our enterprising merchants investigate the matter and see what can be done?

Chickens vs. Cotton.

There is now and then a farmer who keeps an accurate account of his exfind one who is willing for the public to have the benefit of his experience. Our friend Fountain Williams, of Jones county, sends us a statement of one of his tenants, Mr. John K. Humphrey, which shows the result of his experience with cotton and chickens for the year

We publish today a timely article from Commissioner J. T. Patrick on the subject of fruit canning. We are surprised at the small cost of starting the business. Large quantities of blackberries, and huckleberries grow in this section of the State, and tomatoes can be grown extensively and cheaply. These with the pears and peaches that grow in this section would keep a cannery running several months in the year.

Mr. Patrick offers to send us the names of persons wishing to engage in manufacturing enterprises in the State and also those who desire to purchase property. These we will publish and that she did not get into Pungo river our readers having property to sell can correspond with them. He also makes the follownig announcement in regard

C. K. HANCOCK, has been greatly strengthened in Brooklyn by an incident of St. Patrick's Day. D. Beckman, a grocer, of No. 151 Grand street, has owned a large boa constrictor for some months. The snake, which was eleven feet long, was exhibited in the window of the store. Patrick Moran, a clerk in the place, decided to try the effect of shamrock on the serpent, and for this purpose sent to friends in Ireland for a veritable sprigfrom the Green Isle. He received it on Monday, and with the permission of the plant on the boa constrictor on the morning of St. Patrick's Day. It was reported last evening that the bridge over the Neuse near Poole's mill, on the new road, was washed sway. Yesterday Messrs. G. E. Leach and John Y. MacRae went out to Milburnie, and say the river there looked like the Mississippi. They embarked in a canoe at the small house just at the foot of the bill this side of the river, and after a hard pull of half a mile found dry land on the other side. Immense logs passed their frail boat at every few moments and several half-wrecked houses floated by on the strong and turbid current On one of the houses a big rooster sat, secure from harm, and the visitors report that they heard him crow loudly several times. Stacks of straw and fodder, chairs and other articles of furniture were also swept down the current. The river was still rising when Messrs. MacRae and Leach left at 6:15 p. m.— News and Observer.
