Occasionally Northern gentlemen come this way and stop long enough to get acquainted with our city and its prospects for greater development.

Col. B. S. Pardee, of New Haven, Conn., is not a stranger to New Berne or its people. In fact he resided here for some time in 1862, when unfortunately most of the men of middle age who are now our active and influential citizens were away from home attending to very urgent business. Before they finished it and returned to this city, the Colonel had gone North. Early in 1884, he came back to look about a little, and was so well pleased that he spent several weeks in this vicinity, and sent quite a number of letters to the New Haven Palladium and other New England papers descriptive of this section of North Carolina, its natural advantages and resources, and its business both present and prospective. Those letters were written with friendly interest by many of our business men, at whose request, voiced by the President and several prominent members of the Cotton Exchange, he met a representative body of our citizens yesterday eyening at the Exchange, and spoke in an informal way of many matters of general interest. After referring to the many pleasant acquaintances he made in the winter and spring of 1884, and to the hearty hospitality of the people of all the Eastern counties he then visited,

the speaker said:

"Before entering upon general subjects, I wish to answer one or two ques-Manufacturer's Record on "Cotton tions that have been asked me many Mills in the South," in which the writer times since I arrived here last week The first is, 'How was business at the North when you left there?' To this I reply: 'The outlook was gloomy. What with strikes and labor troubles, dullness at all foreign trade centres, low or with good practical hard sense, one prices for all kinds of manufactured goods, and a fear of impending tariff legislation, there was no confidence in the future, and all conservative business men were trimming their sails for the storm that seemed to be coming. Of these unpleasant signs the labor agitation is the most threatening. If the of gold in both Europe and America. craze continues, (for it has become a Prisoners in a jail at Helana, M. craze) it will disorganize all industries and destroy for the time being any hope of a year of prosperity. The evil is not that labor has organized for self proteca great extent by stamping New Berne, tion. Such an organization is right, N. C., on every package of truck that and if wisely controlled and directed went from here. We noticed on the would inure to the benefit of all classes. demagogues labor organizations than thoughtful and law-abiding men like Master lished and business restored to its normal conditions. But no man can foresee what may occur before this agitation is over. The closing of a single manufactory often compels several others to stop work. Suppose that in obedience to an order of the Knights of Labor the employees of every Northern cotton mill should strike. The disaster would be far reaching. Not only the retail stores of all kinds in the vicinity of these mills would be compelled to suspend, but the great factories where all kinds of cotton mill machinery are made, and which employ thousands of hands, would close also. In your own State the farmers now getting good pay for their dogwood and persimmon logs that were once valueless, the sawmills that cut them up into shuttle blocks, and the men working in them would all suffer from such a strike. It in the South, for when the great mills in five New England States ceased to be English contained in the article. consumers the price of lint cotton would fall far below what it had cost to make it; and what is true of this industry would apply with equal force to all others. In truth the business of this country is so interwoven that an injury to one branch of industry affects every

In one aspect, these labor troubles will be of permanent benefit to the South. Extensive strikes are not possi ble in agricultural communities. the large cities, or at the coal and iron mines, there may be strikes, causing temporary inconvenience, but that is all. The peculiar composition of your population, the fact that so large a percentage of it consists of freeholders engaged in agriculture, will prevent any such condition of affairs as exists elsewhere. Capitalists, manufacturers, and others at the North have begun to realize this, and there is a steadily growing conviction that investments at the South, if judiciously made, will be more safe and more likely to pay hand-somely in the long run than they will at the North if labor agitations continue. It is altogether probable that a considerable part of the many millions that have been put into the South since January 1st were invested thus for the reasons I have suggested.

Mr. J. M. Norris, an old resident of Rome, Ga., says, that he had been badly troubled with kidney complaint for a great many years and with eczema for three years; at times could scarcely walk and had tried many remedies without benefit, until he began taking Electric Bitters and anointing his hands and feet with Bucklen's Arnica Salve. This treatment afforded him great relief and he strongly recommends Electric Bitters to all who suffer with hidney complaints, or need a blood purifier. Sold by Hancock Bros.
