We hear of a real case of somnambulism in the city on Sanday night. A friend was sitting on the side of his bed, when his room mate retired, partly undressed and in that condition lay down and went to sleep. Before day his room mate awoke and found he had gone from the room, leaving his cost shoes and hat. About day he returned without these articles of apparel, but thoroughly wet. He states that when he awoke he found himself on the opposide of Trent river in the water; but when and how he got there was to him a perfect blank.

The supposition is that he left his com, crossed the railroad bridge or wam the river, which, is not known, and reached that point in safety, but feeling rather cool, hastened back to his quarters, and gives this account of his trip.
