who went on strike May 1 are being turned into the woods like so many cat<sup>1</sup> tile. They struck for seventy-five cents, but subsequently offered to arbitrate.
The company declined and placed a strong guard over its property and noti-fied the strivers to vacate the houses they occupied. The men sought relief in law, but the court decided that the leases were valid and the houses must be vacated. The men were given until June 21 to move, but failed to comply and last week were forcibly ericted. The strikers, with their families, numbering 1,000, are camped in the woods and subsist on a pittance doled out to them by the union. It is asserted that but for a few professional agitators the men would long since have gone back to work. Their soudition is deplorable.

BLACK MOUNTAIN, June 24, 1886. This is certainly the most remarkable gathering of educators that our State has ever witnessed. Every train brings accessions, and many find nightly quarters at Round Knob, Asheville and other points. The hours between the appointed sessions pass in delightful social intercourse. Music, on pianos, stringed and brass instruments, etc., abounds and soon we shall have delightful choruses under the lead of the ac complished Dr. Kursteiner, of your own St. Mary's. Promenades on the bal-conies and long walks and drives among the great mountains that encircle the spot, games and strolls for the wealth of ferns and saurels and other beauties on the mountain-side, are occupying the time of several hundred of the pret tiest girls that our schools and home can furnish, to say nothing of the sterner half of creation, which is hurry. ing here, to feast its eves and exercise its efforts to win their smiles, by every passing train. Yesterday afternoon Miss Cox began her exposition of kindergarten work by clear, concise and philosophic setting forth of the principles of the elementary education of the child from the earliest period of perception onward to full intellectual development. It was a rare treat. Then came blackboard exercises apt language and charming manner by Mrs. Humphrey, of Goldsboro.

Prof. Kursteiner's hour having arrived, he entertained the audience with a masterly sketch of the rise in progress of music throughout the world, marked by the learning which distinguishes this master of seven languages and graduate of a renewned German university.

At night Prof., N. B. Henry, of the State University, was announced to de-liver a lecture upon the "Theory and Practice of Teaching," but it was in effect an exhaustive and detailed account of the life and labors of Pestalozzi, from 1747 to 1810, and the subsequent introduction of his methods into his country from 1821 to the present day.

Today Mrs. Humphrey renewed her topic of North Carolina geography, by request, and a free and pleasant discussion followed it by many teachers pres ent, including Prof. Joseph Moore, of New Garden, and various others Dr. Kursteiner then began his course in music proper, and is rapidly reducing don, chaos to form and system, with ease Mr and skill. Prof. W. G. Randall, of Marjon, claimed the attention of the attention in the subject of drawing in school, dwell-ing upon the importance of education in the art of design, and closing by appropriate. and rapid blackboard work in drawing.

Among the interesting incidents of today was the adoption of a resolution to appoint a committee to memorialize the legislature in behalf of the erection on Mt. Mitchell of a suitable monument over the grave of the lamented Prof. Mitchell: to enclose it and to erect a stone cabin for the comfort of visitors. All this, it is ascertained, can be done for $1,500. This action was taken after tributes by his old pupils had been paid in a neat, feeling manner. The pathetic speech of the venerable Prof. Delke of Thomasvills, a graduate of the University of N. C., of 1841, brought tears to many eyes. any eyes.

Mr. Gladstone stild the enthusiasm in favor of home rele surpassed anything he had witnessed during his life. Despite the long purses of his opponents, he looked forward to the result of the elections with confidence. We say true that he demonated the nationalists in 1801, but it was because he thought they was a but it was because he thought they were in the wrong. He supported them now because he thought and knew they were in the right. He now proposed to give a statutory Parliament to Ireland to deal exclusively with Irish affairs. rule was a question of classes spained the masses. The liberal party, he said was, as a rule, not supported by dukes, squires, clergymen of the established church, officers of the army, and so forth. Wherever there was a fright privileged, publicly endowed profession almost every member of that profession was an anti-liberal; but from the legal and medical professions, which were now open, the liberals received a fair share of support. The question was whether the masses were able constitutionally to overbear the classes, because it had always been shown that wherever truth, justice and humanity were con cerned, the masses were in the right and the classes were in the wrong. He would show this by reference to Lord Randolph Churchill, whose name he had not mentioned before during the canvass, and which he did not suppose he would have occasion to mention again. He had been told that Lord Randolph Churchill had had a good deal to say about him, but he (Mr. Glad-stone) had not taken the trouble to in-It was very difficult to describe burchill, but if he could cut out one half of his qualities he might make with the other half a valuable and distinguished public servant. Mr. Gladstone hoped they would not err on this occasion. Parliament. he said, had been paralyzed because o the Irish question, and it would remain paralyzed unless some measure of justice were passed. Ireland had struggled to bring her case to the front, and had succeeded. She was now backed not only by her own members, but by a vast number of English people. He believed that the measures proposed would tend to promote the growth of prosperity in Ireland. The liberals were told that the result would be that England would have to held Ireland by force, but this have to held Ireland by force, but this she was doing now. He hoped to hold her in future by love. [Cheers.] Mr. Cladatone concluded, amid loud cheers, with a vigorous denunciation of the manner in which the act of union was effected.

Mr. Thomas O'Connor, speaking here this evening, ridiculed the argument that the passage of Mr. Chadetone's bill would result in the flooding of England with Irish labor.
