THE JOURNAL.

NEW BERN, N. C., AUG. 29, 1896.

A Fashionable Mistake.
He had been to the city and went home brimful of news.
"You remember the Smiths?" he asked his wife. "The Silver Oak Smiths, them as got rich on their gran'father's money?"

Yes, she remembered them.
"I seen 'em. They're way up; live in a gran' house on a street they call thavenoo. They ride in a double kerridge and have no end of money."

She said she a'posed as much.
"But, dumb sakes! Mandy, you wouldn't want ter change places with her. I see her a minnit an' I didn't hev the heart to speak t' her."

She said she'd like to know why; stuck up thing!
"No, she ain't, Mandy; not now. She's bin humbled rite down to the dust. She's as blind as a bat."

Blind! She guessed not.
"But she is! First, she didn't kno' me—me that's rid down hill and played tag with her when she warn't knee-high to a turkey. Then, Mandy, tho' her eyes was wide open, she went rite along the streets all dressed up in her fine clo'se, and a little mite of a dog was leading her along. He was tied to a streeng, and she had hold of t'other end of the streeng. Now, Mandy, how'd you like to be her?"
