Another one of those brutal sword contests has taken place and this time much farther east. An account says: About 2,000 persons witnessed the mounted sword contest at St. Louis Sunday between Duncan C. Hoes and August Schmitt, late of the German army. Schmitt is an adept swordsman, and the fight was a genuine one. There were nine attacks, and all were vicious. Blows on the armor counted, but head blows were allowed. Ross, who is extremely powerful, cut through Schmitt's special success for nine years is the superintendent, though, from what I can learn, the man who durves much honor for the catalitations of the Bulks Grana-age, is Mr. Noas Biggs at Scolland Nock. He not only was about the first to agitate it, but he gave the first thousand dollars it received.
