THE JOURNAL.

A Love Story.

A touching story comes from Charleston, telling of one sorrow that came with the earthquake, of which no newspaper mention has been made. A letter to a Wall Street man gives the unhappy inci-dent. A couple of young folks liv-ing in a country hamlet a hundred miles or so from Charleston were married about a week before the earthquake's fury, and they were enjoying the first days of their honeymoon in a visit to friends in Charleston when the terrible disaster came. The groom—whose name is Culbreth—was hurt somewhat, not gravely, but enough to add a large measure of personal auxiety to the fears of his bride, who, naturally of a frail constitution, became mentally overwrought, and though the doctors strove their utmost to give her assistance, all efforts were vain, her condition growing worse and worse, till within a half week the beautiful girl had become, not merely emaciated and a wreck physically, but was as well—so the doctors said—hopelessly insane, beyond all possibility of recovery. The young husband bears his sorrow in a dazed sort of way that promises ill, too, for his future—seeming scarce able to comprehend what really has come to pass. These young people had exceeding bright prospects; they had money, intelligence and happy dispositions. Seldom has such
