THE JOURNAL

Mrs. Crabtree's Good Advice. So much has been written on the happy that my poor pen ought not to attempt a line on the subject, but I have recently been to so many places people called home, yet were so different from the real meaning be attractive must be neat and slean, but how can a poor tired mother with hands full of work keep the house neatf There must be a co-operative system. First, the husband must provide such conveniences as his means will allow. Don't have a kitchen on one side of the house, the well and wood-pile on the other side. Just think of the miles of walking your wife will have if she has to carry the water to the kitchen. Provide things for her comfort. The children should be willing help; girls, when asked to assist in the house hold work, do not say, "Oh! mother, I'm so tired, make some one else help you." How thoughtless and feel too weak to fill up the wood box, and do not think the sun too hot for you to use a hoe among the flower beds. I'll guarantee it wouldn't be too bot to play baseball if your club match game. I know a family of eight children and only one servant is employed (a boy fifteen years old), and when the mother asks any of the children to assist her in the work, they invariably say, "Make Cuffy help you." That one article, Cuffy, has been the bane of many families. While there is one negro on the place he must stand between the white children and work. Parents, teach your children the importance of knowing how to work. Also encourage the innocent and merry diversions in which the young delight. Let the children feel that their happiness is your great desire, but that you expect each one to contribute to the general happiness of the household .-- MRS. CRAB-TREE, in Southern Cultivator.
