For The Farmers.

We commend the article from "A Visitor," to our farmer readers. Mr. Vyne is introducing new methods and we are exceedingly glad he is succeeding. A farmer of this sort in every community is worth more than all the experiment stations and agricultural departments.

Level Up The Sidewalks.

A gentleman remarks the sidewalks daily has discovered the fact that the winds blow the sand about so as to form little holes about the size of a bred tray and when the rains come they fill with water—all bred trays hold water—and it is difficult to pass along dry shod. With sidewalks like New Berne's it requires constant attention to keep them leveled up so the water will run off.

Short Sketch of Charleston.

We have received a copy of a neat pamphlet issued by the Atlantic Coast Line giving a short sketch of Charleston, S. C., how it fared in two wars and an earthquake. The author, Maj. Graham Davis, who holds a prominent position with the Line, shows remarkable powers of condensation in crowding into this little volume of forty pages so much information concerning the Palmetto City while passing through the trying ordeals of the Revolution, The War Between the States and the late earthquake. Among the illustrations are, The Ravenel residence on East Battery, Fishermen's Hall, Goose Creek Church, Market street, Medical College, an earthquake geyser, etc. All these photographs represent the conditions of the originals after the earthquake of Aug. 31st, 1886.

There is also a map with this work showing the different lines of railways and connections and the number of miles controled by the Atlantic Coast Line. It is a valuable little work.

The Vyne Hay Farm.

A signal pleasure was enjoyed by one who has not ridden out to Havelock and spent a day with Mr. Garret Vyne on his plantation. We speak after having made the proof. It is amazing that the first Holland colonists, who settled on this tract of land, grew discouraged. No just reason for failure here by any prudent and industrious man exists. One thing, however, is undoubtedly true: to succeed, the planter must be willing to leave and to abandon many old notions about farming, even if they are the pet ideas of father and great-grandfather. The best thing to do with many of these old-time customs, if men are wedded to them, is to write them out carefully on the best legal cap paper, then bury them by grandfather, and put up one of Mr. Joe Willis' handsome tombstones over them, and let them both rest from their labors.

But we were talking of Mr. Vyne's work. He took us over his premises, several miles in extent, and showed us his canals—almost fit for boating, and connecting with the remarkable lakes;—his beautiful ditches, straight, smoothly cut, and miles in length, for effective drainage; his many tenant houses; his broad corn fields; and chiefest of all his prairie like hay farm, and his capacious barns, holding that money crop, baled hay ready for the market. Here was demonstration that there is no necessity for our sending North to import hay, when it would grow at our own doors. Mr. Vyne holds that there is money in it, and he is making it. He has his own baling machine, and he understands machinery too. Neither does he neglect to raise food. In his granary may be seen three thousand bushels of corn; so his family will not starve this year, nor any of his "critters" either. Just let anybody take a look at his family—don't look at him, for he may not eat enough, and he's going all the time under a full head of steam—but see his "folks," and you will know they do not fast in his house. Get at his hospitable board, and you will see that somebody in that establishment knows how to make bread, so light and beautiful, that it looks as if it would take wings, before one could anchor it with some of that fragrant butter. Alas! some people think that no working man can live on such good food. They need that foolscap paper and the tombstone!

But that "butter." We were taken to the dairy; a door from the dining room opened into it. Where are the necessary spring and stream of cool water? There are none. This is a solid brick room; the walls and floor of brick, and brick overhead; all surrounded, or encased, in wooden walls about a foot distant, with circulation of air between. There is no freezing here in winter, and no undue heat in summer. Here were pyramids of bright tin pans with their rich milk, on burdened shelves; and yonder are the yellow rolls of butter, ready for the New Berne market. At once I petition to be supplied every week; good-bye to oleomargerine, even if it is better than butter. I prefer mine cow-margerine, i. e. pearl butter.

But our fathers did not do this way, and my wife don't do so. Mr. Vyne takes his calves away from their mothers at once, and feeds them. That's cruel, and they can't be well raised in that manner. The objector has only to inspect the calves here, and see how they drink the milk from a pail and wonder at their splendid condition, to learn that he needs another sheet of that "legal cap" and one more of "them Willis' headstones!" Get it quick!

A comfortable country house, reminding one of the town; tidy stables; a splendid poultry yard and a stock of well conditioned hogs; these things, as we went around, indicated general attention to details, and as a result, thrift and well earned prosperity. But Mr. Vyne has a good lieutenant in his superintendent, Mr. Tippet, who is a wide awake man too.

A pleasant visit this was to the country, to a farmer, who was not complaining of everything going wrong, bad crops, his stock and utensils, and land all mortgaged, and for bread and meat largely too. Mr. Vyne does not put all his eggs in one basket, or try to pack them all in cotton. (Another sheet of that paper and call on Willis!) Mr. Vyne has been experimenting with grass seeds to find the best varieties for this climate and soil. It would be well for him to give his experience through the JOURNAL for the benefit of his brother farmers. Some criticize his methods; but he is succeeding, and some of our watchful and enterprising farmers are trying his plans, without fear of ghosts from the little graves, where some of the old worn out pet theories quietly sleep. May many more of them slumber without a resurrection! And may many more spreading Vynes take firm root in our virgin savannahs, and beautify and enrich our eminent and inviting domain with rich and abundant clusters of perennial blessings. A hearty Old North State welcome to all such incomers! So mote it be.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Special to the JOURNAL.

RALEIGH, January 29, 1887.

In the Senate bills were introduced to require State board of education to complete certain roads, and to regulate assignments so there will be no preferred creditors.

Bill to require county commissioners to place in jury box names of all persons not convicted of felony was tabled after warm debate. Its passage was urged by Lockey (Radical), of New Hanover.

Session of House was dull. Important bill was introduced to enhance interest of State in Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad by providing for construction of branch lines, to renew law in regard to divorces so that if a man commits a felony and leaves the State it shall constitute ground for divorce.

The following bills passed second reading. To require prompt certification to lower court of Supreme Court opinions; to give four causes of challenges of jurors in capital cases; bill to create railway commissioners was made special order for next Tuesday.

House adjourned while debating bill to repeal the law allowing county commissioners after twenty days' notice to increase the bonds of clerks of court and register of deeds.

Protecting Delaware Fisheries.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 27.—The House passed unanimously this morning Representative Norny's amended bill defining a bona fide citizen. The object of the bill is to protect Delaware fishermen and oystermen from the competition of migratory fishermen from New Jersey and Pennsylvania. It prescribes that a bona fide citizen, under the fishery laws, shall be construed as one who has had his home or domicile in the State for one year preceding his application for right to fish in Delaware waters.

Defaulted State Bonds

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 28.—Representative Adams, of New York, today introduced in the House, for reference, a joint resolution authorizing the attorney general to take all proper and legal proceedings to collect the principal and interest of certain defaulted bonds of the States of Arkansas, Florida, Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana, North Carolina and South Carolina, now held by the United States as trustee for certain Indian tribes.

Another Shock.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—A Times special from Omaha, Neb., says: Dispatches from Fremont, North Bend and other points within a radius of one hundred miles west of this city report that the people were very much startled about eight o'clock last evening by what is supposed to have been a severe earthquake shock. A loud rumbling of the earth was perceptible, for several seconds and buildings rocked in a violent manner. No damage reported. No disturbance whatever was perceptible at this point.
