All the above is still further and more fully confirmed by our press dispatched published this morning, and there is no longer any doubt that the little Richmond and West Point Railroad Company, which a short time ago was but the caudal appendage to the Richmond and Danville Railroad, is now on top of the heap and is heading one of the most powerful railway systems of the country. The movement thus inaugurated has by no means yet ended, and it seems quite likely that before a very great while the Gaurgia Central and its branches and connections will all be united in the same combination, and Richmond will become one of the great railway centres of the United States .-Richmond Wkig.
