Mahone Sues Riddleberger—The Senator on the Witness Stand.

WOODSTOCK, Va., Sept. 5.—The suit of Gen. Mahone against Senator Riddleberger on a bond for $500, dated July 16, 1881, was tried today in the Circuit Court. Mahone's deposition was offered in evidence and Senator Riddleberger was put on the stand. Mahone claimed that the money was loaned to Senator Riddleberger. The Senator denied receiving any money from Mahone for his own use, and said every statement made by Mahone in this matter was untrue; that Mahone was not in Woodstock in 1881; that he had no connection, association or conversation with him; that Mahone had loaned him $750 in 1876, when witness was a Tilden elector, but Mahone was not suing on that; that the witness got no benefit from this money; that it went to candidates. The Senator said that he did not give a bond at the time, and was not requested to do so until afterwards. He acknowledged having received money on several occasions, but for campaign purposes. He had been requested to put $500 in the Richmond Whig in 1879, but had refused on the plea of extreme poverty. Then turning sharply, on W. E. Craig, of Staunton, Mahone's counsel, Riddleberger said, "Now tell whether you put any in." The Senator's retorts to questions and remarks of Mr. Craig were frequent and sarcastic. When the latter rose to say, "I waive all objections to anything the Senator may say," the latter promptly responded, "I'm glad you don't object to my telling the truth." "Go on," said Craig. "I'll go on with you telling me," responded the Senator. He then said Mahone wanted witness to insure his life for Mahone's benefit, but he had replied he had rather insure it for the benefit of some one else. He wound up by saying that Mahone would never have sued him if he (Mahone) had carried the Legislature that elected John W. Daniel to the United States Senate.

A letter was then handed Senator Riddleberger, who read it and acknowledged it as his own. It was addressed to Gen. Mahone, and was dated at Woodstock, July 17, 1881, one day after date of the bond. It was written, like the bond, in violet ink, and possibly, as the Senator acknowledged, with the same pen. It was a long gossipy letter. It was read in court. Counsel for Mahone laid particular stress upon the following passage: "General—I received the draft on you yesterday, and devoted much of yesterday to applying it. Thank God, I now have no obligations to but one person, and that to you. Randolph Tucker assured me I would get the railroad fees in the winter, and you may look for a prompt return." Questioned on this point, the Senator denied that this referred to the bond given the day previous, or that he had promised Mahone his fees in railroad cases. The jury could not agree this evening, and were discharged until morning. A second suit for $1,000 will follow this one, which it is said Mahone will attend in person.—Baltimore Sun.

France Does Not Want War Yet.
PARIS, Sept. 4.—A foreign diplomat, friendly to French interests, though representing his country at Berlin, has been interviewed by the Figaro as to the relations now existing between the governments of Paris and Berlin. He said: "The attitude of Germany towards France is the same today as it was yesterday and as it will be tomorrow if the life of the octogenarian Kaiser is still further prolonged and if the invalid Bismarck still remains in the land of the living. The official relations between the two countries are of course good, but they are not cordial. Care is taken not to tread on each other's corns, and when that evil hour occurs vociferous 'beg pardon's' are heard on every side. Unfortunately this friction is incessantly taking place owing to the action of the frontier officials of both Germany and France; and after a while some one will wake up and announce that a beg pardon is no recompense for down-trodden corns. Then there will arise an interminable correspondence, which will lead to nothing but recriminations from both sides.

"The gentlemen of Wilhelmstrasse (German Foreign Office) are noted for their economy in the use of ink. Yet hardly a day passes that M. Herbet, the French Ambassador, does not receive an official inquiry as to something which happened here or about somebody who didn't do something to somebody somewhere else. The elder members of the Diplomatic Corps in Berlin, we who know Bismarck's complicated character, feel convinced that one of these days some little incident like the Schnaebeli affair will bring about a war; and the task of M. Herbet at Berlin is, in my opinion, to postpone that declaration of war as long as possible. I believe that he will for sometime meet with success, and I have not the slightest fear of a conflict arising at any early date. Both the Kaiser and the Prince Imperial are very sick men, and not in the least desirous of war. Every move that Bismarck makes or causes to be made on the European chessboard is directed against France. To such an extent has he exaggerated at Berlin the military preparations in France that there are many millions of people in Germany who today believe that across the border, in the vicinity of Nancy, there are thousands and thousands of Tureos, Zouaves and Chasseurs Tonkinois ready to pounce upon Germany."

The diplomat concluded by stating that Germany alone is responsible for the frontier friction, and that if such a cool, prudent man as M. Herbet did not represent France in Berlin, the history of the war pour la revanche would already have been written.—N. Y. World.

Napoleon in Exile.
Napoleon's life at St. Helena was so guarded from the knowledge of the islanders, and even of the officers of the garrison, that on the arrival of newspapers from England the first question asked was, "What news of Bonaparte?" The great prisoner was known simply as "General Bonaparte," and by no other title. A code of signals was written out in a small book, by which Sir Hudson Lowe, his jailer, was kept informed of every movement of his imperial prisoner. When he took his daily ride within the prescribed boundary, the men, working the wooden telegraphs on the hills, sent such messages as these:

"General Bonaparte has left Longwood." "General Bonaparte has passed the guard." "General Bonaparte is at Hut's Gate." "General Bonaparte is missing."

The last message was telegraphed because the general had turned, in the course of his ride, an angle of a hill, and was hidden for a few minutes from the observer.

An English ensign, now General Ward, was stimulated by curiosity to see the exile, to such a degree that one night he risked his commission for the chance of a glimpse at the mysterious captive, through the Longwood windows.

Every night, at sunset, a cordon of sentries was drawn around the Longwood grounds. The venture some ensign crept, under cover of trees, between two sentinels, up to a lighted window of the house. The curtains were not drawn, but the blind was lowered. Fortunately for the youth, two or three inches of space remained open between the blind and the window frame.

The ensign knelt and saw some one walking up and down the lighted apartment. He could see of the exile only a pair of thin shoes with diamond buckles, two well bound legs encased in silk stockings, and the edge of a coat lined with white silk. On a sofa, as placed as to afford the "peeping Tom" a full view of its occupant, was Madame Bertrand, with her boy leaning on her knee.

The Emperor was speaking slowly and distinctly, and some one was writing at his dictation. The curious ensign returned to the guard-house well repaid, as he thought, for his risk, for he had heard Napoleon Bonaparte speak.

The last occasion on which Napoleon was out-of-doors, the ensign spied him through a military telescope. It was a bright morning, and the sergeant of the guard at Longwood Gate said to the ensign, "General Bonaparte is in the garden, sir." The ensign seized a spy-glass, threw open the guard-room window, and surveyed Napoleon as he stood talking to General Bertrand.

Something on the ground attracted his notice, and he stooped to examine it. Suddenly the music of the band of the regiment was heard, and he moved away to catch a glimpse of an inspection.

The severe restrictions were maintained as precautionary measures. Napoleon had once before escaped from an island, and the British Government did not wish Europe to be again disturbed by the sudden appearance of the Emperor on the continent.

Napoleon's remains now rest in Paris, under the gilded dome of the Invalides. While this mausoleum was being prepared for the Emperor's ashes, a party was walking one morning through the work-rooms, inspecting the sculpture intended to adorn the vault.

One of the party was the brilliant Count D'Orsay, and another was the director of the work, who struck the granite block, which was to encase the remains with a hammer, to exhibit its solidity. A spark followed the blow.

"See," said the Count, "France may yet light torch at the tomb of her Emperor!"

The remark was prophetic. France's cry, "On to the Rhine!" which heralded the war with Germany was inspired by Napoleon's idea that the Rhine is the natural boundary of France.

Ten Broeck's Tombstone.
Frank W. Harper, the well known turfman, has ordered at Versailles, Ky., the costliest monument probably ever placed over the grave of any being below the estate of man. It is for Ten Broeck, the famous race horse, who recently died at Mr. Harper's stock farm, near Midway. Ten Broeck was foaled on the farm, and belonged to Mr. Harper throughout his whole life, and was beloved by the Harpers as a member of the family. The monument is to be of white marble, 7 feet 2 inches high, and surmounted by an urn. Upon its side will be inscribed the date of the birth and death of Ten Broeck and his noblest achievements.

Personal.
Mr. N. H. Frohlichstein of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. JAMES MEANS' $3 SHOE

Because it is made for men whose comfort is such a matter to call for a better shoe than the JAMES MEANS' $3 SHOE. Our $3 shoe has been established for itself a permanent reputation for comfort and durability, and is no other shoe but every known to a factory of the trade. No competitor is able to approach it. The James Means $3 shoe is light and sturdy, and it is as durable as any shoe of its weight ever made. We cordially assert that in every respect the James Means $4 shoe is equal to the best-made shoes which have hitherto been made. It has a perfectly smooth bottom, and it is like a stocking, and requires no "breaking in." It is perfectly easy the first time it is worn. James Means and Co.'s shoes were the first in this country to be fully advertised. If you have been disappointed in other advertisements, your experience ought to teach you that it is safer to buy shoes made by the leaders of a system, rather than those made by the followers. These shoes are sold by the best retailers throughout the United States, and we will place them easily within your reach in any State or Territory, if you will send us a postal card.
