Some pretty severe comments have others approved their action upon the ground that sheriff Hahn's conduct of the office fully justifies the course they pursued.

It is a matter in which the commissioners are the judges, as we believe their action is final, and it is with them to say whether or not they have conscientiouly discharged their duty to the county and with justice to those who were declared entitled by the courts to these offices.

We publish today the last of the series of articles on "Green Manuring." Under this head the writer has discussed in a concise, intelligible, practical way many topics of interest to the farmer, and given them practical illustrations of the subjects treated. In this last some sensible suggestions are made base. in regard to the improvements of the farm home. Hog killing is now progressing with us, and as good, sweet bacon clear of bugs is just what we all desire, let me tell you all how to have it. Let your bacon he salted about four weeks then take it out. wash it off in warm water then hang it up and smoke it about three weeks then take it down, have a large pot of boiling water, dip each piece in it sufficiently long to destroy all eggs and bugs then let it drain a little. Then get a sufficient quantity of black pepper finely ground and mix with it real good apple vinegar, just enough to make it about the consistence of good paste; apply it on the fleshy parts of the pieces; after you have finished then you can hang it up again and raise a smoke for a couple of days to dry it off. You need not give it any other attention as no bugs will bother it any more. But during a long damp spell of weather it would be best to raise occasionally a smoke to prevent its moulding. want each JOURNAL reader to try it if you will and follow directions closely and you will all be pleased with it, and when you market your hams you will do just as I have done for the last few years-get one cent more in the pound by it.

GREEN MANURING

NUMBER 20.

In this closing number I desire to bring to the attention of the farmer several matters of interest and of importance to them in regard to the im provement of their homes In the majority of cases the farm is the only prop erty owned by the occupant. It is the probably be the home of his family for many years after his death. It is his fortune. It is the bank from which he draws the daily supplies of food for his family. It is the property on which his best energies have been expended, and on which his future labors will be given. It is the home of his wife and children.

It should be the object of the owner to make the soil more productive, and therefore more valuable each year, and with proper management this can be done with small cost. as has been shown in the previous articles, by the use of green crops for plowing under.

The farm should be made so attractive that the wife and children will feel pleasure in calling it their home. Flow ers, ornamental vines and fruit trees are among the best investments that a amily can make, one or two acres de voted to vegetables for family use will reduce the meat and flour bills at the store one half, and also adds largely to the comfort and health of the family and if properly managed will supply food for more pork than the profits on five acres of cotton would produce from Chicago. Our Southern farmers will be sur prised to know that the most valuable plant in the world is grass. That the most valuable crop in the United States is grass, and that if one-half of the labor and energy of the Southern farmer which is now given to killing grass was devoted to the production of grass and other food crops, they would be in much better financial condition.

Cotton in one sense is the most valuable crop that is grown. It furnishe laborers with employment from the day that it is planted, until it finally ends its career in the paper mills and printing office, but cotton will bankrupt and ruin any man or county that at-tempts to make it pay for the horses, mules, hay, meat, bread, molasses, and almost every other article of daily con-sumption, from the profits of an "all At some future day other farming

At some future day other farming ubjects may be discussed. The writer akes this occasion to acknowledge the ourtesy of the press in giving space to be articles, and hopes that they may be the means of awakening a deeper accreet in improved agriculture. A.
