The Production of Apples.

No farmer who has the land to spare should be deterred from setting out an apple orchard of good fruit by the fear of no market, or, in other words, overproduction. The population is constantly increasing, and the apple is the king of American fruits, sought for everywhere and only in exceptional cases and limited districts is there in any year such an excess over the demand as to render an orchard of good fruit unprofitable. As many as 7,000 barrels of American apples have been sold in London in a single week and the demand for them is steadily increasing. And England is only one of the many countries to which they are sent. The manufacturers of pure vinegar in this country also make a market for an immense amount of the common varieties. The fear of apple growing being overdone has been entertained by some people, from time to time, for as many as forty years back; nevertheless a good orchard has continued to be a good thing to have, and it is quite safe to predict that it will be the same hereafter for first class apples of good keeping qualities. The amount exported to countries other has grown to such an extent that it is stated that the value of it is almost equal to one seventh of the estimated merchandise value of the whole amount produced.

WHAT AM I TO DO?

The symptoms of biliousness are unhappily but too well known. They differ in different individuals to some extent. A bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. Too frequently, alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquids but none for solids of a morning. His tongue will hardly bear inspection at any time, if it is not white and furred it is rough, at all events.

Little Georgy (to a sponging old uncle)—"I say, uncle, you're a sort of cannibal, haunt you?" Uncle—"Sort of cannibal? Why what do you mean, Georgy?" Little Georgy—"I thought you was a sort of a cannibal, 'cause ma said you'd a'ays a livin' off'em somebody."
