Fire Eagines Operated by Electricity. A great improvement in the handling and working of fire engines might be brought about by the application of electricity, says the Jewelry News. In fact, an engine can by such means be oper-ated from a central station in the same manner as electric light is distributed over a large space or a city.
While the pumps are being attached to the hydrants, the engineer by attaching the connections of his motor to the proper wires, and the alarm having notified the central station, the electric current therefrom would operate the fire engines, entirely avoiding the transport of heavy accumulators, either on the engine or the hose carriage. Other great advantages would be in the lighter weight of the engine, and hence the greater speed and ease with which it could be taken to a fire: and also the celerity with which it could be brought into action, and its reduced cost.

How he Celebrated.

In celebrating the "day when our land was made free," we naturally use the commodity of which we possess the greatest amount. If we are fluent as speech, we tell our fellow-townsmen how they ought to feel; if we are rich enough, we indulge in fireworks, or, it we are under a certain age, we "holler."
"How did you celebrate, Bobby ?"

Fourth. "Oh, I fired off crackers in the morning-and hollered-and then Jim Lane and I fixed a tar barrel on the hill, and we set it afire and hollered while it burned." "What then ?"

"Oh, I don't know! Yes, I do, too; I began on my torpedoes then,

for ! Did you cheer !'s

"Oh no," said Bobby, doubtfully, 'I guess we didn't cheer exactly.
