SENATOR VANCE.

To a North Carolinian, there is magic in the name of Vance.

From the time Zebulon B. Vance entered the public service of the State to the present hour, he has steadily won the respect, the confidence and the affection of his people. But never has Senator Vance appeared grander than he does now; never was sympathy so blended with admiration as it is at this moment in the sick chamber of North Carolina's peerless statesman.

The news that flashed over the wires, on yesterday, announcing that "Senator Vance today had one of his eyes removed," sent a thrill of anguish through ten thousand hearts, and, as the shades of evening gathered around his bed, prayers arose from family altars, all over this land, that Heaven would strengthen and shelter him who had so often been the shelter and strength of his people.

The recital seemed incredible. But it was, alas, too true. A few days ago Zebulon B. Vance stood in the Senate, the matchless exponent of the Constitution and the acknowledged champion of the National Democracy. No one dreamed of his physical condition as his resistless thunderbolts fell upon the head and front of opposing factions.

Oh, how his people love him! Love him because of his intrinsic manliness! Love him, for the dangers he has braved and the battles he has won. Love him, because, in the hour of extreme suffering, his noble spirit rose superior to physical agony, and shed new luster on a name immortal.

Oh, how Vance will be missed in the Senate!

It is gratifying to know that Senator Vance stood the operation, by which the eye was removed, remarkably well, and that, at last accounts, he was resting comfortably, and that all danger was past.

Every hour will be filled with intense solicitude until the happy day when it can be said of the Senator, "Richard is himself again."

BOULANGER.

Telegraph messages have announced that "the French elections on Sunday resulted in the choice of Gen. Boulanger by a very large majority. The vote was an unprecedented one; the press variously comment on the significance of the result, and in consequence of the victory the Ministry tendered their resignations but President Carnot declined to accept them."

The JOURNAL has never spoken slightly of Gen. Boulanger. We have constantly looked to see his star in the ascendant. Had he lived in Germany, Russia, England or America, his fortunes would have been different. He is as peculiarly suited to France as fruits and flowers are to the tropics. How he will sustain his elevation is beyond the bounds of human knowledge. Conjecture itself is too timid to venture upon so uncertain a field.

Boulanger repudiates the often repeated accusation that he is an enemy of the Republic. He would rescue France and save the Republic. How?

We must wait for an answer, but the waiting will not be long. Stirring events are just ahead, and all Europe listens for the first notes of the Boulanger quickstep. If he moves towards the temple of Mars, neither prophet nor seer can foretell his destiny. But, if with reverent step, he leads to the temple of Justice, the very gods will salute his standard and ordain his coronation.

But, suppose Boulanger becomes the President of France, or even "the power behind the throne," will war be declared against Germany? The wisest cannot tell. Months ago Boulanger declared that "France though not desiring war, is ready for war."

With William the second, Emperor of Germany, and Boulanger at the head of France, Europe would become a military camp, ready at any time to "let loose the dogs of war."

Uses of Cotton Seed.

The cotton seed which of late years has been put to such profitable uses is steadily increasing in popularity. Heretofore the seed after being taken from the cotton boll was thrown away, but now it is about all put to use and readily sold. From this valuable seed is extracted the much used cotton seed oil, and from the residuum are obtained cotton seed meal, cotton seed bran, and cotton seed hull ashes.

The seed after being taken from the cotton gin goes through a "lint machine," which takes off the short staple cotton which the gin does not remove. This short staple cotton which is sold mostly to concerns who use it for cotton batting, is also used for other purposes. After all the fiber is taken off, the bare seed is cracked and the kernel is separated from the hull. The kernel is then ground and put under severe heat or cooked. In the heated state the most oil can be extracted, and it is therefore put into a large iron caldron and is subjected to a heavy pressure. When thoroughly pressed, the residue or meal is in the form of cake.

USES OF OIL.

Cotton seed oil is used for numerous purposes, and is displacing other popular oils, owing to its cheapness and healthfulness, as it is purely a vegetable oil. This variety of oil is used very largely by lard manufacturers, who adulterate their lard with it. Although most people would prefer pure lard, it is claimed that the cotton seed oil adulterated with the hog lard improves the quality of the stock. The hog lard contains more than twice as much water as the seed extract, and consequently one pound of adulterated cotton seed oil lard goes much further than the pure stock. Large quantities of seed oil are yearly shipped from this country to the countries on the Mediterranean where olive oil is produced. It is used almost wholly there to adulterate the olive oil, which is then sold both here and in Europe as olive oil from the Mediterranean countries.

Most of the sardines are now packed in this new oil, and it proves to be successful. Bakers also buy barrels of the liquid, which they advantageously use in substitution for the more costly lards and greases. Chemists and druggists use considerable also. The white or refined stock is used to quite an extent in the Pennsylvania coal mines for oil. Although the cost is much higher than that of petroleum, the safety of the variety is preferable to the more explosive kerosene. The crude stock is used extensively in the manufacture of soap, as is also the foots or residue left after the oil is made.

THE MEAL.

As above stated, after the oil has been abstracted from the kernel, the caked meal is left as a residue. About 150 mills which utilize the cotton seed use both products, the oil and residue or meal. Most of the residue is sent to England in cake form, where the farmers crack it and feed their cattle with it. A large amount has been satisfactorily used in the West, and it is being sold in this market, it is claimed, quite successfully. This meal is claimed to excel all others as a feed for cattle. That used in this country is not in the cake form, but ground, and now brings from $26 to $26.50 per ton. Last year the prices ranged from $23.50 to $24 per ton, the advance being caused by an unprecedented foreign demand. Cotton seed meal is not only claimed to be better, but also cheaper than other meals.

In St. Louis there is situated a mill which makes cotton seed bran from the hulls, and claims that it is superior to other coarse feed and costs much less, bringing about $21.50 per ton. Most of the mills burn the hulls of the seed for fuel and sell it for fertilizing purposes. These ashes are bought by farmers in conjunction with the meal and mixed by them for fertilizer. This mixture is said to contain an abundance of potash and phosphoric acid, which have very powerful fertilizing properties. The ashes are worth from $30 to $32 per ton. This fertilizer is not exported, but used here, in this country mostly in the Connecticut valley, by the raisers of tobacco. The supply is limited, and dealers say they could have sold twice as much if they had it.—Commercial Bulletin.

A Good Deal in a Name, Sometimes.

A man of the name of Taylor—Renny Taylor—one day married a second wife, a very pretentious woman, and went to spend his honeymoon in Paris. The surprise of his friends was great when he returned with a card plate engraved "Mr. and Mrs. Renny-Tailleur."

Amongst those people who did not take altogether kindly to the new title was an aged relative from whom the Taylors expected a legacy, and who made no secret of her disgust. Consequently, when the new married couple went, a few weeks after their return, to stay with her, they expected an outbreak on the subject. The old lady, however, said nothing at all until the unlucky Taylor made a remark about a new possession she had acquired in the way of a car of repulsive appearance and uncongenial habits.

"That's a nice dog of yours, aunt," he said one day, after administering a kick to the creature on the sly. "What's his name?" "Well," said the old lady, setting her lips firmly, "I used to call him 'Jowler,' but now I call him 'Jowlere.'"

The Taylors went home next day, and the aunt left her little fortune to a party of the name of Smith, with a reversion to a deserving charity, in case Smith should ever show any symptoms of a desire to call himself "Smythe."
