MONEY IN POLITICS.

The use of money in politics is not discreditable to parties nor to individuals. The manner of its use determines whether it merits censure or applause.

When a citizen contributes to a paying the legitimate expenses of the campaign, the act is a creditable

Dudley's motto is "Get There." The means are of little or no consequence. Moral obligations with him are weaker than ropes of sand. - No religious creed restrains him-no Christian flag trails in the dust because of him.

Wanamaker is the opposite of Dudley in faith and practice. From his youth up he has been a christian. Dudley has done no injury to hamanity and religion because he cannot rise high enough to assault them. Wanamaker has come from the temple of God and fired a train that may shatter its foundation.

No christian gentleman, no moral young man will follow the example of Dudley because there is nothing attractive in the method or the man. But many a man of pure character and lofty purpose has been accustomed to regard Wanamaker as worthy of honor and imitation.

After Wanamaker had contributed so largely suspicion was aroused and men were not slow to avow that it meant the purchase of the Presidency and a participation in the rewards. Seme there were who could not believe him criminal, but when he accepted a place in the Cabinet, it was at once recognized as a reward for the amount paid by him in the great national sale and purchase of the Presidency.

Whenever a suspicion attaches to the conduct of a christian, chrislanity is wounded.

Of too many who have in some way earned the title of great, this is by no means true. Its applicability to the character of Washington is verified in the following interesting plans. Demorest's Magazine.

Does it seem possible that only one hundred years ago, when Washington was inaugurated in New York the first President of the United States, that the city was then a small place, sixty times smaller than at the present day, or having only about thirty thousand inhabitants? Now New York City looked at that time, and the cus toms and costumes of the residents are graphically told and beautifully illustrated in Demorest's Monthly Magazine for April, which has just arrived. At this time, when the Centennial of the Inauguration of Washington is about to be celebrated, this article will be greatly appreciated; and those who purchase the April number of this popular Magazine will be repaid, not only by this, but by numerous other attractions, not the least of which are the beautifully illustrated article on "Birds," by Olive Thorne Miller; "Young Japan at Play," DRUGS & MEDICINES CHEAP FOR CASH which will give many hints to the children fer new games; "Romes with Two Servants," which contains suggestions for the management of servants, und there are numerous other equally interesting subjects.
