The JOURNAL has no desire nor intention to engage in any movement to turn out or to keep in the present administration of the A. & N. C. R. or to take any tions and whose interests are identified with the road, being appointed directors; and while it will give any management its earnest support in trying to make the road a success, it will also try to give facts in connection therewith whether they be favorable or unfavorable to the administration.

It was openly charged that Governor Scales ignored the wishes of the people along the line of the A. & N. C. R. in his appointments, and we think the present administration has made a great mistake in trying to administer the affairs of the road upon the same principle. It is charged, and we doubt not the charge can be sustained, that large shippers have been alienated from the road by the enforcement of ironclad rules in small matters, which could not do other than make the administration unpopular and damage the traffic of the road.
