It is generally admitted that any man who, attempts to accomplish a purpose, believing at the time that he will not succeed, as a rule, will fail in its ac very agreeably disappointed, and success may attend his efforts, but the rule is not thus.

Whereas, on the other hand if a man takes hold with vigor and practical ability, with the 'knowledge that he has strength within him to succeed, and a determination then he will accomplish his purpose, and steadily perseveres. though obstacles may arise, and arise they surely will. This man will ultimately in return for his labor receive more or less compensation.

The time has come when it is an absolute necessity that a man must have an object if he hopes to succeed. That he presses onward to the accomplishment of that object unremittingly. Could a business man, a merchant, hope to make his success certain if he depended entirely on his clerks? No matter how faithful they might be, the undivided purpose could not possibly another regardless of self.

A man to succeed must be directly and personally interested that the whole force of his nature may be developed, and applied to the purpose in view. Thus as it is in individual effort, so it when communities strive to improve is when communities strive to improve themselves as a whole. If divisions and jealonises exist among the peop e, no matter how much show of endeavor may be made, the lack of real spirit will more than counterbalence all the good there may be produced by such a
