WHITTY & GATES—Cotton ginners, attention!

The cotton platform is being repaired. Prof. Geo. W. Neal has secured Lawthrop Hall for his school and is having it put in first-class order. It is a splendid location.

Mr. Stinson is busy laying the foundation of the "old mill." We hope to hear the whistles from his mills again in a short time.

An article from "Goshen" on our editorial page will doubtless interest our historians cannot Col. John D. Whitford, Rev. Dr. Vass or Mr. Jonathan Havens give some light on the subject?

Miss Mary L. Allen gives notice to her friends and promised pupils that she has accepted a position with Prof. G. T. Adams in the New Berne High School, and she hopes to have the pleasure of teaching the young ladies in the new academy building, instead of her own school room as at first expected.

The elegantly written communication from John S. Long Esq., in this issue is well worth reading. It shows how the people in the section he is prospering. Much of the territory he writes about would be tributary to New Berne if we had a bridge across Neuse river. Will we ever have it?

Shipping News.
The steamer Eaglet of the E. C. D. line sailed yesterday with a cargo of lumber and other exports. The Annie of this line will arrive this morning.

State Farmer's Alliance.
Mr. H. H. Perry returned from Fayetteville last night where he had been attending the State Farmer's Alliance. He reports that nearly every county in the State was represented and the meeting was a profitable and interesting one. Elias Carr of Edcombe was elected President. The next meeting will be held at Asheville.

Fine Ox Killed.
Yesterday one of the smoke stacks standing amidst the ruins of Mr. Stinson's large saw mill fell with a crash striking one of the fine oxen belonging to him and killed him instantly. The yoke was an exceedingly fine one, the two being almost just alike and about the same size. During the campaign of 1884 we think the driver named them Blaine and Logan.

Mayor's Court.
Mayor Williams disposed of the following cases yesterday:
John Slade, violating Chap 5 sec. 3 of ordinances. Fine $2.00 cost.
Samuel Cook, violating Chap. 9 sec. 3. Discharged upon payment of cost.
Florence Barber col., Chap. 5 sec. 8; Isaac Powell col., Chapt. 5 sec. 4 was dismissed.

Harrison Sparrow col., Nancy Wilkins col., and Henry Chesnut col., were each charged with violating same ordinance were discharged upon payment of cost. Susan Pelletton col., and Aelix Davis col., upon the same charge, paid taxes and were discharged. Lewis Fields col., for violating same ordinance was discharged upon payment of half cost. I. H. Smith col., and General Rouse col., charged with violating same ordinance, were continued.

A Turbulent Congregation.
There is a church on Tin Cup Alley, of colored people, that seems to be continually in a row. The Mayor had before him yesterday one of the parties charged with inciting a riot. Much interest was manifested and many of the sisters were present to bolster up their respective sides. When witnesses were giving in testimony responses could be heard from the crowd such as the following:
"Dat's de trufe to de lawd," "dat's it, tell it," &c., &c.

The Mayor dismissed the case against the one charged with the riot, and warned the members of the church present that if they did not cease to disturb the neighborhood with their quarrels and fights, he would recommend to the board of council to declare the assemblies there a nuisance and have the doors of the house closed.

THE LADIES DELIGHTED.
The pleasant effect and the perfect safety with which ladies may use the liquid fruit laxative, Syrup of Figs, under all conditions make it their favorite remedy. It is pleasing to the eye and to the taste, gentle, yet effectual in acting on the kidneys, liver and bowels.

For a disordered liver, try Beecham's Pills.

A Short Visit to Beaufort County.

It is a little over forty miles, as the crow flies, to the hospitable farms of Haslin, in the eastern end of Beaufort county. Tired almost to exhaustion of the confined limits and weary routine of city life, we left Newbern on the 27th of July, to go to that El Dorado of generous hearts, fat chickens and delicious buttermilk. Knowing that Fowler's ferry was a good place to start from to go anywhere, we sought our first streak of luck at the quiet inn and sandy beach on the other side of the Neuse. From there to Grantboro we had a clear sky, fragrant pines and all the serene, tranquil charms of the country. But after that, up to the very gates of Aurora, it rained as if Noah's flood had come again. The farms, whether under a depressed and discouraged look until we reached the famous South Creek region, where we saw noble corn and very beautiful cotton. These rich fields of loamy soil seemed absolutely to defy the weather, and to hold out promise of a goodly harvest. We were particularly impressed with the splendid cotton crop of Lewis Thomson, which, though seen under angry clouds and a driving rain, spoke eloquently of industry, fertility and able management. A night and morning spent at Aurora brought us to see again the genial face of our great-hearted old friend, Tom. Bonner, and to grasp the hands of many old friends, linked to us by a thousand memories. Aurora, after an absence of sixteen years, was a great surprise to us. It is no longer a cross-roads, with poverty on its front and dependency in its accents, but a rarely comely little village, with a mayor and city government, filled with a bright population, with the fair forms of beautiful girls and young children on its streets, with churches and schools shaping its future, and with a commercial enterprise and purpose marking its growing history. At the head of South Creek navigation, with noble farms all around it, and with such intelligent and patriotic citizens, it is compelled to grow forward. Nevertheless we had a funny exit from Aurora. That gallant and popular sailor, Captain Wallace, had greatly against his consent lost a five hundred pound wheel from the steamer Washington in the Creek, and gravely announced that, instead of crossing to Pantego, he must go back to town to avoid further perils. It was refreshing to hear our arguments to this level-headed old salt, to convince him that one engine was as good as two, and that as the town of Washington was further than Pantego of course it was more dangerous to go to the former than the latter. Somehow there were sundry obstructions of experience and nautical knowledge in the way of our logic, and we had to give in. The pill was bitter but we had to take it. Back to Washington we went, and this dear old town, every foot of whose sacred soil is bound to us by the tender associations of the past, had to be visited under a cloud of vexation, disappointment and discontent. However, Tom Myers, who suffers neither propellers, side-wheeler or anything else to cramp him, furnished another steamer the next morning, and we headed for that region so rich in Indian lore, Pungo river. What a wide, beautiful stream it is. It only needs the illusion of moonlight and an hour without wind or wave, to see again the flash of the Indian's paddle, and to hear from Woodstock's silent shore the hum of his council fires.

At the junction of Pungo river and Pantego creek we passed by steamer, and afterwards visited by buggy, Jack's Neck, where the Northern and Southern have pitched the terminus of their railroad. It is a most convenient and suitable site for a depot. No pent up Utica of waters here, but a wide expanse, where by steam and sail the navies of the world may come to anchor. Thor conductor of the train, before shouting, "all aboard for Edenton," wheels upon the platform of the rear coach, and looks with one unbroken vision, past cape and bay, towards Pamlico Light to the very verge of the Sound. Within a few feet of the shore large vessels can ride, and the daily line of steamers which this Company proposes to run to Newbern will, in seven hours from the Elm City, transfer their passengers to coach and rail. Now when we come to consider, that this railroad is already half built, and is expected to be finished in October, we can imagine the fiery activities of men outside Craven county.

Pantego, the point at which we left the steamer Beaufort and its gentlemanly commander, Captain Parvin, is a flourishing little village, about thirty miles east of Washington, and on the direct road to Hyde county. It has several churches, a number of prosperous stores, and is surrounded by an agricultural country at once fertile and well cultivated. It seemed to us that its chief chronic disorder was an unfortunate grist mill, which catches and holds all the floods of rain, overflowing and ruining the farms of the back country, from which all the corn and cotton are to bring the trade of Pantego in the following fall and winter. This seemed to a traveller on the wing as a case of cutting off your nose to spite your face. However as we have a number of these disgraced cases nearer home, we said nothing.

In the heart of Haslin, an enchanting rural district five miles farther east, we spent an ideal vacation, such as tired poets and authors spend in the shady nooks and romantic dells of the Hudson. No chickens full of cholera nor razor back meat to haunt the sleeper's dreams in that country. Fresh milk and butter, delicious cream and buttermilk, and what sweetens and ennobles all, an open-handed hospitality, which has long made Beaufort county the paradise of tourists, greet the traveller like a benediction. St. James, the holy sanctuary among the pines, holds the gateway of Haslin. The visitor enters it with the thought of hallowed memories crowding on his mind. Then though he finds no rich and splendid farms, he meets a people manly and independent. The country is picturesque, because roads and fields alternate with quick changes of light and color, magnificent oaks, beeches and pines fill the perspective, good and level roads make driving a continual charm, and the culture of the soil is the fruition of taste, skill and common sense. The spirit of the country is eminently social and friendly. A citizen of that district may have cold feet, but he never has cold hands or a cold heart. Crowds of young people, intelligent and polite, ride, drive, dance and sing, giving the rostrate hue of dawn to a region which has long worn the crown of old age.

The Clark, Johnson, Overton, Jarvis, Latham, Trip, the Wilkersons, Ways, Edmondsons and many others constitute a representative population, which gives tone and character to the entire section! Tarrying with the attractive family of a Confederate soldier and beloved kinsman, Major Marsh, we were at most charming, central point, where we could enjoy the country, study the people, and drink in the refreshing winds from the Sound. We felt it a sad necessity when the last hour struck, and we were compelled to face about for home. But what a county that is for surprises. On our return to take the steamer at Washington, we suddenly came out of a thicket of woods upon another railroad. Startled and astonished we said, "What is this?" Our amused companion said, "It is a railroad, started at Bayview on Pamlico river, already six miles long, and bound to Plymouth. In Craven we look upon a railroad as a National revolution, a change of government, or the end of the world. But in that country if you put a chip on a man's shoulder, and knock it off, he starts for his spade to dig a railroad."

All the way from Leachville to the county seat the crops, though greatly damaged by rains, indicate a fair harvest. Around old Bath, where we had the pleasure of sleeping in a large colonial mansion one hundred and fifty years old, we frequently passed beautiful cotton. At last we boarded the superb steamer Manteo, commanded by that prince of sailors, Captain Southgate, at the opening of whose line with the steamer Olive we delivered the address of welcome twenty years ago, and whose commercial energy gave the first successful impulse to steam on these waters, and turned our face towards the patient, long-suffering city by the Neuse and Trent. JOHN S. LONG

Mayor Williams' Remarks.
Mayor Williams met the Atlantic boys at Goldsboro on their return from the Raleigh Firemen's Tournament and welcomed them in the following well-timed remarks.

Mr. chief engineer, officers and members of the Atlantic Steam Fire Engine Company No. 1. I come here today as the chief executive of the city of which you are the pride to extend to you a cordial greeting as you are returning home from the field of victory. Your conduct has been watched with anxious solicitude by the entire population of New Berne, who never faltered in the belief that your gallantry and skill which has achieved so many triumphs in the past would not permit your banner to be trailed in the dust.

True to the confidence they have reposed in you. You have fought gallantly and won nobly. Technicalities may deprive you of the prize, but no technicality can ever dim the lustre of your fame. I again, Mr. chief engineer, officers, and members of the Atlantic company, give you greetings from your city where your praise is being sung by every citizen who will take delight in honoring you on all suitable occasions as the guardians and protectors of their highest interests.

New Berne crowns you victors and gives you the prize for brilliant achievements let others do as they may.

Personal.
Mr. J. W. Turner of the firm of T. J. Turner & Co., has gone North to replenish their stock of furniture.

Miss Maria Manly has returned from Baltimore and other points North.

Miss Fannie Wooten, the newly appointed postmistress at Ft. Barnwell, vice Harris removed for incompetency, was in the city yesterday and has forwarded her bond for the position.

Mrs. H. W. Battle and Mrs. J. K. Willis left on the steamer Kinston yesterday for Ft. Barnwell.

Rev. L. W. Crawford, T. A. Green, Esq., Mr. S. R. Ball, Miss Lucy Righthart and E. E. Harper are attending the M. E. Sunday-school Convention at Kinston.

Fraternal Feelings.
We rejoice to see such a warm friendship existing between our firemen and [Wilmington] department. The Wilmingtons did not attend the Raleigh Tournament, but the following item from the Star shows how they appreciate the skill of our New Berne firemen:

"A basket containing a quantity of liquid refreshments" was sent to the "Atlantic" engine house yesterday evening, with a card requesting the members of the company to drink to the health of the New Berne firemen in Raleigh, who were the winners in the contest for quick steaming and first water. The "Atlantic" boys responded promptly."

For constipation, "liver complaint," or biliousness, sick headache, and all diseases arising from a disordered condition of the liver and stomach, take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets—a gentle laxative or active cathartic, according to size of dose.
