CONFEDERATE MEMORIALS.

Far be it from us to detract one iota from the fame of the gallant soldiery of the North who carried the flag of the Union in the bloody war between the States. Their heroism and fortitude is worthy the loftiest panegyric. Let their monuments arise in commemoration of their valor and devotion, and we will look upon them with pride as memorials of a nation's gratitude. There is nothing in national sentiment opposed to the recollection of noble deeds, and so long as memory holds its sway we will cherish the names of those immortal men, who in obedience to American instincts, threw their swords in the Confederate scale, and "poured out their blood like water before they knew whether it would fertilize a land of freedom or a land of bondage."

As Confederate soldiers we have nothing to regret. The part we bore in that illustrious struggle will be handed down from sire to son, and the names of Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, be repeated with pride through coming ages. What memorial shall we erect to the honor of our brave—the men who went out at the call of their States to achieve Southern independence? We speak not of political agitators who acted through motives of personal ambition, but those of all ranks and conditions who responded to the call of duty without counting the cost.

First, we second the suggestion that a monument be erected to all the Confederate dead. "Let it rise 'till it meets the sun in his coming. Let the earliest light of the morning guild it, and parting day linger and play on its summit." Then, in the language of the Wilmington Messenger, "It is really high time that steps were taken by North Carolinians to erect a monument to North Carolina granite to the memory of the 125,000 or more North Carolina soldiers who fought in the war between the States." This is a sacred duty too long neglected.

It has been suggested that the States of the South make the birthday of Robert E. Lee a holiday. It is impossible for us not to sympathize in any movement having for its object the honor of Lee. But is not the measure of his greatness full? What can add to his glory? In the world's imperishable archives he lives forever!

Over the portals of fame's proud temple the names of Alexander, Caesar, Napoleon and Lee are inscribed in letters of living light, that grow brighter and brighter as the years roll on in their ceaseless round.

We adore Lee, but let it be remembered that he is the central sun in a firmament of stars. It is to the great army of Confederate dead that we would erect a monument that will reach the Heavens.

Human or Divine—Which?

If the questions at the head of this article seem unmeaning, we trust to the argument to make it plain, and we will state right here that if our deductions appear condemnatory of any sect, that we do not necessarily condemn the whole, because we do not approve of a part. Our question does not refer to the origin of the sects, nor does it embrace any abstract questions of theology. It is simply this: Does not that form of doctrine which seeks to govern the individuals in the purely material matters of life, partake more of the humanity, and therefore of the fallibility of religion, than of the divinity? Moreover, does not that doctrine which enjoins secrecy to a stated part—and that not its exclusively private business—of its transactions, partake more of the selfish narrow-mindedness of human judgment than of the untrammelled breadth and scope of infinite wisdom?

Like invariably produces like, and if persons, societies, or sects accept human rules as their criterion, they will necessarily find themselves exposed to the liability of gross human error. And if they persist in following those rules, despite all errors into which they are led by them, they will of course alienate the affections, and lose the encouragement given by the presence of those who would otherwise be attracted by that approach to the divine which is also present. Also when those rules are set aside or ruthlessly broken for one set of persons, and rigidly enforced against another class, equally religious, and equally with the first, desirous to help the good work along, then we are forced to exclaim, "Consistency thou art a jewel," and to recognize the fact that even religion, when handicapped by human regulations, proscribed by human selfishness, will often have its chiefest rules, and the very foundation of its government to its own discomfiture.

Again: In the matter of dress. Do we not know that those who rail most against those who take pride in their personal adornment, are those who are most envious of the wearers of fine apparel? I do not make the unqualified statement that that was the case with the entire movement, but it partook largely of that nature, and human selfishness plays a far more prominent part in such a religion than divine love for God and man.

And again, I ask the questions: Shall our religion be "Human or Divine? Theology or Christianity? Which?" Shall our religion regulate our care for our bodies, to the relegation of our souls to a secondary position, or shall it regulate our care for our souls, trusting the promise that "All these things shall be added unto you." Shall it be a religion of secrecy withholding some of its benefits from the world or shall it be open as the love of God, himself, free to all men, blessing all men in all its departments? Shall it be Human or Divine?

ANON.

A Warning for the Bathing Season.
A writer in one of our contemporaries, in summing up the causes for many bathing accidents, concludes that most of them are mainly or entirely personal, and so far preventable. Chief among these, we need hardly say, is cram. To a large extent this is practically identical with fatigue, for it is not the fresh and vigorous muscle which most radically passes into spasm. It is that which is wearied with over-action, in which effete products are in excess, nutrition consequently impaired, all muscular changes languid; where, finally, the movement of contraction, once initiated, gives way but slowly, and tends to linger and become tetanic. The numbing influence of cold is another well known obstacle to muscular activity, and for this reason it is not a rule advisable to remain more than a few minutes in the water. Malnutrition of muscles is a factor which ought not to be forgotten. It supplies a reason why bathing very soon after a meal is not advisable, much of the blood required for muscular exertion being then diverted to the digestive organs. So likewise must it impose a check upon the rashness of those, youth and adult alike, who after a period of town life, with little physical exercise, and themselves at the coast, and insist on trying whether with jaded energies they cannot safely accomplish feats of swimming. Yet one more caution. This is that every bather should know the state of tide, the currents, and the ground. Unless he is thus careful, he may find himself at any time confronted by unexpected dangers, the end of which it is impossible to foresee. It may seem ridiculous to urge that only those who really can swim should bathe in deep water, yet neglect of even this precaution is by no means uncommon.

He that would be angry and sin not, must not be angry with anything but sin.

Superstitions About Gems.

The opal is an emblem of hope. Garnet preserves health and joy. Loadstone produces somnambulism. Emerald promotes friendship and constancy. The Burmese believe that the ruby ripens like fruit. Amethyst banishes the desire for drink and promotes chastity. Agate quenches thirst, and if held in the mouth allays fever. Amber is a cure for sore throat and all glandular swellings. Crystal induces visions, promotes sleep and insures good dreams. Diamond produces somnambulism and promotes spiritual ecstasy. Cat's eye is considered by the Cingalese as a charm against witchcraft. Moonstone has the virtue of making trees fruitful and of curing epilepsy. Sapphire produces somnambulism and impels the wearer to all good works. Topaz is a cure for hemorrhages, imparts strength and promotes digestion. Coral is a talisman against enchantments, thunder, witchcraft, and the perils of flood and field. A boquet, composed of diamonds, loadstones and sapphires combined, renders a person almost invincible and wholly irresistible. Onyx contains in it an imprisoned devil, which wakes at sunset and causes terror to the wearer, disturbing sleep with ugly dreams.

THE INVALIDS HOPE.

Many seemingly incurable cases of blood poison, catarrh, scrofula and rheumatism have been cured by B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), made by the Blood Balm Co., Atlanta, Ga. Write to them for book filled with convincing proof. G. W. B. Raider, living seven miles from Athens, Ga., writes: "For several years I suffered with running ulcers, which doctors treated and pronounced incurable. A single bottle of B. B. B. did me more good than all the doctors. I kept on using it and every ulcer healed." D. C. Kinard & Son, Towaliga, Ga., writes: "We induced a neighbor to try B. B. B. for catarrh, which he thought incurable, as it had resisted all treatment. It delighted him, and continuing its use he was cured sound and well." R. M. Lawson, East Point, Ga., writes: "My wife had scrofula 15 years. She kept growing worse. She lost her hair and her skin broke out fearfully. Debility, emaciation and no appetite followed. After physicians and numerous advertised medicines failed, I tried B. B. B., and her recovery was rapid and complete." Oliver Secor, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I suffered from weak back and rheumatism. B. B. B. has proven to be the only medicine that gave me relief."

The politician is lost who hesitates long enough to explain.

THE NEW DISCOVERY.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may yourself be one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of its staunch friends, because the wonderful thing about it is, that when once given a trial, Dr. King's New Discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never used it and should be afflicted with a cough, cold, or any Throat, Lung or Chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time, or money refunded. Trial bottles free at B. N. Duffy's Wholesale and Retail Drug Store. Wholesale price, $3 per dozen.
