We hope that Gov. These are the last batch of the "Swamp" bonds and those being taken up the long suit will end.—Raleigh Evening Virgin.

PRESIDENT HARRISON delivered in the Senate an earnest prayer that no President would ever be mean enough to violate civil-service rules. We should like to hear from him again. Isn't it a long time between prayers, Mr. President?—Florida Times-Union.

THE Southern Republicans in the Federal House are still represented as being hungry, angry and with the war paint on. They have held a conference and one of the disappointed and disaffected plainly said that "the Administration of Harrison and the Northern Republicans generally treat us worse than we are treated by Southern Democrats." This is very bad. So hungry, and yet so cold. Awful! They are whetting their tomahawks in earnest now, so report says. Burrows, of Michigan, is their latest favorite. But what will he do for them if elected? What can he do?—Wilmington Messenger.

The News and Observer Not Satisfied.
The first announcement from the News and Observer upon the action of Governor Fowle in his appointment of directors of the A. & N. C. R. indicated that that journal would sustain the Governor; indeed, if we remember aright, it stated that Governor Fowle was bound to respect the opposition to Mr. Bryan, and could not under the circumstances re-appoint him.

But in its issue of Sunday last it severely criticises Governor Fowle and charges that he has not profited by Governor Scales' experience. This we emphatically deny. Governor Scales appointed his directors without consulting the people of Eastern Carolina; his appointment for President was always considered a Raleigh appointment, or one made by Raleigh influence, and the appointees, unfortunately, possessed a better faculty for making enemies than reconciling the people to the action of the Governor.

Governor Fowle, on the other hand, did consult the people of this section; he appointed the directors and State's proxy from along the line of the road, and we believe the people are satisfied and will sustain the Governor.

Since the appointments by the Governor we did not care to discuss the matter further; but if attempts are to be made to show that he has acted unwisely and was not in accord with the wishes of the people in not re-appointing Mr. Bryan, then the JOURNAL is ready for the war.

Vigor and Vitality.

The blood is purified, enriched and vitalized, and carries health instead of disease to every organ. The stomach is toned and strengthened, the appetite restored. The kidneys and liver are roused and invigorated. The brain is refreshed, the mind made clear and ready for work. Try it.

Trapping and Hunting Bear, Panther, Wild Cat and Wolf in Craven Co.

Meeting Mr. T. H. Mallison at the stockholders meeting, Morehead City, his first enquiry, "how is my little bear hunter, Dalton?" Tell him we caught his bear soon after he left my house the other day". Dalton, a boy about five years of age, ascertaining a relative, a lady, was about to visit the family of Mr. Mallison, insisted upon accompanying her, to catch a bear, having heard it was of frequent occurrence down there, and was allowed to do so. But the lowering of the herd around the house the first night after his arrival satisfied his ambition sufficiently to keep him quiet, during the rest of the visit, on the bear question, and it is not the first time, in the course of human events, that the manifesto was greater than the deeds in battle. As has been before said the introduction of firearms, in modifying the face of the globe, physically as well as morally and mentally, has not failed, of course, in its effects upon savage animals as well as savage men. If it has thundered civilization or extermination into the ears of one, it has as well detonated circumspicion into the ears of the other. The new and invisible power, the rifle, so mysterious in its operation to the red men at first seems to have overawed, intimidated and driven back into the fastnesses of our deepest swamps our wild animals, and it is not often one appears in the open woods. Mr. Mallison's farm, fifteen miles below New Berne, reaches back near the lakes and now and then Bruin, from hunger or for a mess of fresh corn or pork, will risk an excursion even within the reach of the smell of gun powder, or perhaps as dangerous an enemy, the steel spring trap; with one of these Mr. Mallison informs me he had caught and killed thirty-five bear of different ages and sizes, and in all, where he now resides he has killed in various ways about fifty. A few weeks ago one was trapped and killed that weighed two hundred and fifty pounds, and if it had been fat it would have weighed upwards of three hundred pounds. The last trapped was, as before stated, a day or two before the stockholders meeting. Mr. Mallison was down in his field among his hands who were ditching, and he happened to see at some distance across the field a lump on a gum tree that he had not noticed before. Watching it a moment, he saw it move when he cried out a bear. The hands at once became demoralized, throw down their axes and spades, ready to run off, and it was with difficulty he could prevent it. Securing a gun and going to the tree, he found the bear had been caught by the hind leg and had ascended the tree with the trap and heavy chain to it which had by the movement of the bear become wrapped around the limbs. The tree was cut down and the bear shot with the gun. We all know Bruin is a sagacious brute. Mr. Mallison states if caught by the hind leg it will ascend the first tree it reaches, but if the trap is sprung on the fore leg it will go off into the woods, sometimes, a mile or more, walking upright on the hind feet and holding up the released fore leg and foot the trap and chain, occasionally when tiring throwing them down, then taking them up again and move on, as before, until exhausted. If the chain gets hung in the bushes or around logs he will release it at once. These traps are never securely fastened, fearing the fright of the bear when it is sprung would cause Bruin to break out—the chain is attached as a drag only. Going in a corn field the bear will pull the ears of corn off the stalk as would a person; when an arm full is secured they walk out on the hind feet, stepping over the fence as would a man, thus situated, with one leg at a time. Sometimes they will sit awhile on the fence and look around as would a human thief, and if not molested will step down and walk off in the woods as before stated. Among the other modes of killing the black bear as well as other animals is one the Indians employed, a trap composed of logs, which when the animal attempts to remove the bait, either falls on his body and kills him outright or secures him until he is put to death by the owner of the snare. The last wolf killed in Craven county was with this kind of trap set by the late Cornelius Dixon, the father of Mr. George Dixon, of Broad creek. It was some years before the late war. Mr. Dixon began to lose his pigs and proposed to catch a wild cat and secured the wolf which seemed to be alone. None other was ever heard from there. However, the writer being with the surveying party, near a Mr. Taylor's on the Harlowe and Clubfoot Creek canal, when running a line to Beaufort of the A. & N. C. railroad, got the glimpse of a wolf the dogs were chasing. It escaped in consequence of starting up a bear in the chase. If I remember correctly a black wolf was taken alive on Davis' shore, in Carteret county, about 1850 or before. The others alluded to were grey. To return to the bear, it is well known the females exhibit for their young a degree of attachment that nothing can surpass. They usually have two cubs which are suckled until they are well grown. The fondness existing between the mother and cubs seem to be mutual. She caresses them sometimes as a woman would her children and no danger can separate her from them, nor any thing short of death itself, can induce her to forsake them. A gentleman related to me this incident in bear hunting: A few years ago, below New Berne, a she-bear accompanied by her two cubs was brought to bay on a ditch lane by the dogs, when the mother snatched up her young and stood upright on her hind feet, hugging them and trying to cover them with her fore legs. Thus she remained until he walked up and discharged with fatal aim from his gun into the parent's lifeless on the earth. We have another incident of the sagacity of even very young bears: A relative of the writer happened one night to be the guest of Mr. Mallison. They had trapped a small cub and it was taken out with a crushed foot. The father-in-law of Mr. Mallison was also with him at the time. The injured foot of the little fellow was carefully dressed by him, and as soon as it was done it crawled up in his lap, and after that exhibited as much attachment for him as would a favorite dog. The cub would shun all others and follow him.

Again, a grown bear was caught by the foot in a trap, in the upper part of this county. A cage was made and the bear and trap dragged into it. One of the party interested with the pressure of a pole enabled it to withdraw its foot. The bear did not forget this act of kindness, and whenever afterwards he approached the cage it would show the greatest docility, while with all others it exhibited the ferocity of the wild beast.

The black bear under ordinary circumstances is not, however, remarkably ferocious. We do not think he would attack a man unless wounded and fighting for his life; then he would, undoubtedly, defend himself desperately. In captivity he seems never still, and keeps moving all the time backwards and forwards. The bear has his den in the most secluded parts of the swamps or peccosins, and there, at least, he is still during the period of his torpidity.
