The new cruiser Baltimore has been pronounced the fastest war ship afloat.

The 2,000 laborers added to the Norfolk Navy Yard to vote for Mahone will probably all get pensions when the Virginia election is over. —Courier-Journal.

Now that the Harrison Administration has got fairly at work, the Treasury surplus becomes a dissolving view. But the public debt grows more and more a mountainous reality. —Boston Globe.

So there is a double reason why all North Carolina should take an interest in the Fayetteville centennial: To show appreciation of the value of the American Constitution, and to show respect to a leader who staked the aspirations of his life on a cause in which he honestly believed. —Charlotte Chronicle.

ALL these things will be simplified when Presidents rise to a true and dignified conception of the nature of the appointing power and learn to employ it, as it was intended by the framers of the Constitution that they should, in the interest of the public service only. —New York World.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL MILLER did not succeed in making President Harrison believe that Tanner's mouth carried Indiana for the Republicans. The gift of a Cabinet position to Wanamaker, the chief of the campaign boodle raisers, indicated some time back that the President knows a thing or two more than Miller does about what carried Indiana. —St. Louis Post.

CAPTAIN MCKINNEY said on the hustings in his first speech at Charlottesville that he would meet Mahone when he desired, anywhere, except in "The Kitchen," in joint debate. Up to this date General Mahone has not communicated, directly or indirectly, with McKinney on the subject. Mahone is about as anxious to meet McKinney as he is to disclose his new scheme for settling the State debt. —Norfolk Landmark.

There difficulty Mr. Harrison is encountering in finding a satisfactory successor for Tanner in the Pension Bureau is due altogether to the fact that his principle of selection is a wrong one. His plain duty is to appoint a capable person, known to be honest, who will manage the affairs of the office in strict accordance with the law and be have himself as a public officer should. There are scores and hundreds of such men available, and a President sincerely seeking to do his duty to the country would have no difficulty in filling the place promptly and satisfactorily. —New York World.

It is very gratifying to the friends of the University to know that thus far 180 students are in attendance. But with such a Faculty and such a record there ought to be at least 280. We fear the friends of the University do not work hard enough for it. Suppose they exerted themselves as much as the Baptists work for their excellent college, the numbers would probably run up to 300. What about that endowment? What do the alumni propose? Will they take it out in silence or in talk? Who will start the good work of endowment with $10,000? It ought to be five times that sum, but $10,000 will form a splendid nucleus. Rally friends, rally. The alumni should form sub-associations all over the State. —Wilmington Messenger.

"The Streets of New York."

Next Monday night will be the opening of the theatrical season in New Berne, with Dion Boucicault's famous comedy drama, "Streets of New York." The play is an old one, having first appeared in 1857 at Wallacks theatre in New York City. It pictures life in this great metropolis with all its varying lights and shades. The company is on a southern tour direct from New York and have with them their full equipment of scenery, which is pronounced to be grand.

Our Editor Absent.

Mr. H. S. Nunn, editor of this journal, left on yesterday for the western part of the State, with the hope of restoring his health to its accustomed vigor. For several months he has been more or less unwell, but he has stood manfully to his post in the discharge of his duties to the public. In his absence those of us who remain in the office will serve the readers of the JOURNAL to the best of our ability. We trust that Mr. Nunn will not find it necessary to be away long, and that he will return in due time with his health entirely restored.

The Reception.

The reception last night in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Pelletier, at the elegant residence of Mr. Stinson's was an occasion of genuine pleasure. The bride, always beautiful, looked unusually well, and the groom very clearly evinced his appreciation of the treasure he has so gallantly won.

We are sure that we express the sentiments of the community in tendering to Mr. and Mrs. Pelletier, the warmest congratulations and wishing for them, lives of unalloyed happiness.

In the combination, proportion, and preparation of the ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures where other preparations entirely fail. Foot-rot in its good name at home, which is a "tower of strength abroad," purified in the phenomenal sales it has attained, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most successful medicine for purifying the blood, giving strength, and creating an appetite.

A Letter from Governor Fowle.

We were shown yesterday by Clement Manly, Esq., State's Proxy of the A. & N. C. R. R., a letter which he received from Governor Fowle. It is so excellent a document and so clearly expresses our opinion, heretofore given, of Governor Fowle's ideas on the management of the road, that we obtained permission from Mr. Manly to give it to the public. And we take pleasure in publishing the letter as interesting to the readers of the JOURNAL.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Ex. Dept., Raleigh, Sept. 15, 1889.

C. MANLY, Esq., State's Proxy.

Sir—Before my nomination for Governor and several times since, I have expressed to you the part which, in my opinion, the Governor of North Carolina ought to take in the management of the A. & N. C. R. R. The views expressed to you, I have reiterated to many persons since, and that was that it was the duty of the Governor to appoint the men who, in his opinion, were best suited under the circumstances to manage the road successfully, to advise them as to the selection of the executive officers of the company, and then to look to the president and board for the proper management of the road. I have further stated, time and again, that the Governor was not in any sense the president of the road, or had a right to control its action. That he might as well attempt to run the penitentiary or the asylums as the railroad.

Yet, notwithstanding all this, I find that applications are coming to me for positions upon the road, as if I were the president. I wish you to state authoritatively that, save and except as an advisor and supervisor under the law, I exercise no control over the A. & N. C. R. R. I take it for granted that the officers not elective by the board, under its by-laws, will be selected by the president, recommended by him to the board, and, if approved by the board, appointed.

In other words, the road is in the hands of the president and the board, and he and they are in law responsible for its proper management. This is what I conceive the people want, and this is what I have tried to give them. Indeed my desire was just to appoint the directors, and let them select the president, without suggestions from me. But I found, for reasons not necessary to state here, that course was not practicable. I do not mean that my interest in the road had ceased, far from it. I shall watch its progress with solicitude, and give the directors the benefit of anything that I think may be of advantage to it. But I do not wish to be considered responsible for the management of the road, when the law does not give me the right to control it.

Very respectfully,
DAN'L G. FOWLE,
Governor.

We Insist.

We insist that New Berneans go up to the State Fair and capture the concur. We insist that our truckers can beat the world. No specimens will be exhibited by them for fear of stopping the business in other localities. We insist that James Redmond can distance competition on scuppernon wine and similar products. One sip of his Old Nectar is worth thousands of Brown-Sequard's Elixir. We insist that Edward Bull makes the best honey on this continent. Whole swarms of bees have been made to die of envy because of him. We insist that Mr. Gray manufactures wood ware that takes the shine off of china and makes otege-narian house-wives dance the highland fling and fishers hornpipe. We insist that New Berne ladies can take more premiums for fancy work, bread and butter, preserves, pickles and good looks, than the same number of females can in any part of the habitable globe. We insist that they go to Raleigh for victory and conquest. We insist that if they do this, the ladies of Goldsboro, Raleigh, Greensboro, Wilmington, Charlotte and the other villages will come to the New Berne Fair to get even, and such a time we will have next winter as has not been seen here since Washington danced at the old tavern and hitched his horse to a swinging limb of Whitford's sycamore tree. We insist that nothing succeeds like success, and that the capture of the Raleigh Fair is the inevitable prelude to a successful New Berne Fair.

Trapping and Hunting Bear, Panther, Wild Cat and Wolf in Craven Co.

Bear quite often will swim Neuse river even where it is several miles in width, and now and then one is killed while so crossing by passing bostmen. The writer has known two to cross directly to the wharves on the Neuse shore, then swim around to the Trent marshes where one at last was killed. In those days droves of hogs were brought here on foot and slaughtered in the pens near the town, and it is believed the bear were attracted by the scent of the slaughter pens carried over the Neuse with the strong winter westerly winds. But the sight and hearing appear to be the most acute of the senses of the black bear, for although it kills many small animals, yet it does not follow them by the smell. If his gait is heavy and apparently awkward when he walks, it is also so when running, but his strength enables him to move especially through the bushes with considerable speed and for a long time. This animal with us, however, lives chiefly on acorns, grapes, plums, whotheberries, gall berries, bramble and other berries in our woods and swamps, and persimmons. They are very fond of the acorn and on them when plentiful will grow very fat. They are also fond of all kind of nuts and esculent plants. There is a lily that grows in the lake region the root of which they dig with their claws and delight to eat. They will rob a bird's nest either of the young or eggs as quick as a boy, and eat them. They can with unvarying certainty track a turtle to where it deposited its eggs and then devour them with avidity. They make excursions to potato patches, as well as corn fields, as before mentioned, and then play havoc. They can dig up a large number of potatoes in a short time, which is a favorite article of food with them. When the bears are numerous as at Mr. Mallison's ravages are considerable. They will turn over logs and pull down decaying stumps in the swamps to get the bugs and worms there numerously found. Pork and beef they take as a desert.

Mr. David Lewis, "Old Trout," known to many yet living, as well as the hunter, as one of our most successful hunters, was still hunting for deer late one dismal afternoon on Adams' creek, below New Berne. He had lodged in the crotch of a low tree, waiting for the passing game, when the hogs came rushing by in great dismay. He understood it and knew a bear was on their trail and close at hand. Soon he heard a porker squeal, and slipping down from his seat approached the scene stealthily, and when sufficiently near discovered a large bear walking upright on his hind feet behind a heavy hog with his fore paws resting on his back, thus driving it frightened and squealing down in the swamp. Occasionally the hog would attempt to turn, when it would meet with a hard blow on the side of the head from the bear's paw, to keep it on the course desired. Thus slowly the hog was surely going to its death. (Lewis, with steady aim, bruis being so intently engaged in pork, had allowed him to approach quite near), sent the deadly bolt through his back into his heart, dropping him lifeless on the earth; the hog released ran off. This old hunter, Lewis, towards the close of a long life followed his children to Alabama and there, while hunting, was lost in the woods. On the third day's search for him, by many people, he was discovered in a tree. He had used the foresight to climb it that he might more readily be found, and he was thus discovered a long distance from the scene of his search, but the fatigue and exposure soon brought his long life to a close. For miles around New Berne, he had covered, in all kinds of weather, every foot of ground, and I could well add water too, hunting all kinds of game, from a rice bird to a bear. I will relate an anecdote of him that now comes up before me.

"A foggy morning early in autumn, Lewis and Capt. Abner Pastuer, a Revolutionary soldier, started duck hunting on the creeks above the town. Reaching one they divided and were to meet on opposite sides at a stated point, and where they expected a shot. Pastuer was first there and soon seeing a man he could not recognize, appear in front of him, emerge from the grass and bushes with gun ready to fire, thinking at himself, in an instant fired upon Lewis, who promptly returned it; Fortunately the latter was not touched, and the former's clothes were only injured." The mistake occurred in this way: Lewis wore a light drab over coat, which the wet fennel, grass and bushes had so much darkened as to deceive Pastuer, who mistook him for a runaway, attempting to kill him (the woods was then full of them) thus took a shot at his companion, who not understanding it, returned the fire. It was said, at the time, after the shooting, both ran, but that was denied by the interested parties. They were neighbors and friends, Lewis, lying in the house now the residence of Henry C. Whitehurst, and Pastuer, in a house next to the railroad depot, still standing, enlarged and changed in appearance.
