The true test as to whether any given line of business is a monopoly lies in the application of competition. If it have no competition it is practically a monopoly, and if it be not susceptible of any competition it is an absolute monopoly.—Economist.

"The early bird catches the worm" is a maxim, though trite and unpolished, which has become axiomatic. It is a saying capable of being applied to a thousand undertakings, and when its moral is sought it can be forced in two words: "Be prompt."—Mt. Olive Telegram.

The Republicans are making a boodle campaign in the new States. They boast that they have plenty of money for these States, and for Virginia as well, and that the Democrats are short of funds. This is probably true. If boodle will win the new States and Virginia, the g. o. p. will get them.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The Georgia farmers are again at home. They had a driving time. They have visited State fairs, Western farms and cheese factories, and have taken in everything, from the Cincinnati ballet to the blue bass of the great lakes. They carried some wide-awake men and doubtless got some good hints. The excursion was a success.—Augusta Chronicle.

There is very little probability that Senator Everts will be re-elected to the Senate. In that forum he has not maintained the great reputation which he has made at the bar. He has seemed to be, and doubtless has felt that he was, out of his element. He is one of the greatest lawyers that the American bar has graduated, but Rufus Choate was a complete disappointment in the Senate.—Sioux City Journal.

EX-POSTMASTER—GENERAL THOMAS L. JAMES has prepared an explanation of needed postal reforms, which will appear in the October Forum. Mr. James declares that the railway mail service is twenty years behind the times and ought to be very greatly improved; that small offices near to one another ought to be consolidated under one management, so as to save expense; and that ocean postage ought greatly to be cheapened.

The necessary subscriptions to start a sugar refinery have been obtained, and Baltimore looks forward to the pleasing prospect of having an industry re-established here which will do so much for her commerce in every direction. It is desirable that the work should begin as early as possible. The washing of a sugar refinery would bring about intimate commercial relations with South American people and States, and in view of the fact that the centennial of the three continents will be held in 1892 at Washington, it is peculiarly desirable that an industry be well established here before that time.

Then all depends upon the young men. May they be firm and wise: studious to learn and bold for the right! May they never desert a popular government for one of the few! May they stand like an anvil in defence of a free, constitutional, republican government! Let them look to Heaven for wisdom, and lean upon the great right arm of Jehovah for guidance. Said an English writer—"The fairest flower in the garden of creation is a young mind, offering and unfolding itself to the influence of the Divine Wisdom, as the heliotrope turns its sweet blossoms to the sun."—Wilmington Messenger.

The regular prayer meeting of the young men of the Baptist church will be held this evening at 8 o'clock. All persons cordially invited to attend.

How they do come to the circus! People came from every direction yesterday and we could tell by the very appearance of things that a "circus was nigh." A small sail boat came from down the river with five people and four barrels of grapes aboard, which all means, "we are going to the show today."

The devotional exercises at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon were well attended and they were made interesting. The leader, Mr. J. K. Willis, rather departed from the usual way by making it a song service and selecting biblical quotations applicable to that subject. The songs were beautiful and rendered with spirit and feeling.

At the Theatre Last Night. The theatrical season opened last night at the opera house with the presentation of the "Streets of New York." A large audience was present to witness the performance, which elicited hearty applause. Everybody seemed to enjoy the evening's entertainment. The company made a very pleasant impression upon the audience, and the entire play was well received.

News From the Sportsmen. They say that Governor Fowle is just having a "whoopin'" time hunting and fishing down about Newport. And the other members of the party are having just as much fun as the "Chief" himself. Mr. W. S. Chadwick received a telegram yesterday from them stating that they had slain two deer and one alligator, and were making it lively for game in that section of country.

Shipping News. The steamer Newberne of the O. D. line sails today at 12 m. The Mantoo will arrive tonight.

The steamer Eaglet of the E. C. D. line sailed yesterday with lumber, cotton, naval stores, etc. The Annie of this line will sail tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The steamers Tahoma and L. A. Cobb arrived with large circus parties. The Tahoma sails tonight.

Timber Thieves. Sherman Bond and John Dudley alias Wm. Hill, two colored men, whose last Sunday night to take a raft of timber from Moody & Clarke's mill and carry it across the river to Bladde's mill and sell it. Mr. Moody was soon on their track and had them arrested and taken before Justice Brinson. In failure to bond a hundred dollar bond they were bound over to court. The warrant was for Wm. Hill, but it was afterwards proven that his real name was John Dudley. Bond has before had similar occasions brought against him.

Beecher's Pills cure bilious and nervous illa.

Personal. Miss Emma Henderson and Miss Carrie Arendall left yesterday for Stanton, Va., where they will attend the Wesleyan Female College.

Mrs. D. T. Carraway and little grandson and Miss Eleanor Carraway returned last night from the western part of the State.

Superintendent J. W. Frye, of the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railroad, with his family passed down to Morehead City last night on his special palace car. They go down for a few days fishing.

At Hotel Albert—V. Hall, Richmond, Va.; W. H. Moshier, Baltimore, Md.; Miss Ruth C. Perry, city; A. T. Neal, Raleigh; O. M. Hooker, Aurora; Jno. J. Hosler, Adams Creek; A. H. Whitcomb, Stonewall; William Cleve, Vanceboro; E. M. Gardiner, Miss Clara Douglass, Miss Libbie Moore, Paul Lobel, W. A. Adams, H. Chesman, New York; Geo. R. Hart, Rocky Mt.; J. W. Slover, Grand Rapids, Mich.

About the Exodus. The exodus fever among the colored people of this community has subsided considerably. Since they found out that there is a money-making crowd after them, trying to toll them off to the Mississippi swamps, they are suspicious, and fail to believe all the smooth yarns they hear about great advantages and plenty of money in any of the "promised lands."

We see from the Wilmington papers that about two hundred people left that city last week, which was not as large a number as was expected to leave. The Goldboro Mercury says that twenty-four families have gone from there. Nearly all of these went to Mississippi. The colored people here, from what we can learn, don't like the idea of going to Mississippi. They say they want to get out of the South.

There is more talk than action in the matter, we think, and we doubt whether three dozen people will leave this community. The sensible colored people are going to examine into the thing before they rush off anywhere. Those who do leave will probably cause very little loss to this section.

Borrowing Newspapers. If there are any annoyances inflicted upon editors, the borrowing of their exchanges is one of them. It is true that the granting of so small a favor as the loan of a single newspaper seems nothing more than right, and that a refusal would be a discourtesy. This is the view taken by borrowers, but hear the other side. Mr. A. comes in and wants to see one of your papers just a moment, and walks out with it, saying that he will return it right away. It is more than probable that it is one of your most important exchanges, and you may need it before you thought for. A. has read it at his own place of business and pocketed it or put it in some place for safe-keeping until it is convenient for him to return it, thinking that you did not care for one paper where so many were received. That very paper may be the one you are wanting, and its absence is interfering with your work. If you have not forgotten who has it, you must call a boy from his regular work and send for it. Mr. A. is out or his office may be locked, and this is what makes the editor think bad.

If Mr. A. was the only one to borrow your paper for a short while, you could remedy that by subscribing for him, but B. and C. (and we might take up nearly the entire alphabet) have an equal claim and must be supplied. Books and magazines are other articles that are often considered public property. If we mistake not there are now about half a dozen books taken from the JOURNAL'S library, and some of them borrowed for a long time. Being trustful in the promptitude of the borrowers, we did not keep their names, and we consider that we are out just that many books.

Economy and strength are peculiar to Hood's Sarsaparilla, the only medicine of which "100 Doses One Dollar" is true.

Trapping and Hunting Bear, Panther, Wild Cat and Wolf in Craven Co.

The largest bear of which we have any record, was trapped and killed in what is called the Lake field. It was very fat and when dressed weighed three hundred and ninety pounds. If this is true, and Mr. Marshall states he could testify to it, the beast, on its feet, would have pulled down five hundred pounds. A huge bear for this region of country. Cat hunting when the writer was a boy, was the favorite sport of the sportsmen in our town. Alexander Gaston, son of Judge Gaston, was passionately fond of it. His "wild cat hunt" was copied by the papers far and wide in this country and Europe, with the prediction that he would become famous as a writer. He was then about twenty in years and as more were afterwards put behind him, he failed to reach the expectation of his friends and come up to their predictions. Like premature fruit, his mind matured early and early decayed. At twenty, he was an extraordinary man, at forty, he was not above the ordinary level. It was the reverse with his eminent and accomplished father. He became day after day more learned and wise. The cat hunt referred to commenced early in the morning just over Smith's creek opposite the Federal cemetery and continued several hours with a pack of trained hounds. The cat was finally captured by the dogs, near the spot where it was started, though during the chase, it had gotten miles away in the swamps on the creeks and river. A game and desperate fight was made by it before its death with a pack of hounds Mr. Gaston states that it could have easily pulled down a horse. His description of the battle is very fine. He takes you to the scene of the combat, in the mud and water and there you apparently witness it from beginning to finish. The writer, though then a little child, recollects seeing the cat, Mr. Worthington, a neighbor and hunter, was with Gaston and brought it in on his horse. The cat, though generally courteous and shy, will as does the bear, occasionally venture in and get shot for a fowl or a lamb or a pig. Mr. James Hancock, of this place, when residing not long since on the banks of the Neuse, near Fowler's ferry, shot a very large one with a pistol, which his dogs ran up a tree just back of his garden fence one Sunday in broad daylight. When they thus ventured, they do great mischief generally, before run off killed. I heard a farmer of the county, state in conversation, that he was walking in the woods with his dog and ran a wild cat from her bed in a decaying hollow log on the ground; turning it over, out ran several little kittens, two of which he captured after some effort. As small as these were, seemingly only a few days old, they attempted to bite and scratch him with as much spitefulness as would have been exhibited by the mother. He put them in his over-coat pocket, first together, and then they commenced fighting each other; he then put one in the other pocket; night coming on, when he got home he had neither one, both had escaped; he stated, they could hide as quickly in the grass as a partridge. Wild cats are numerous still in this county, in almost every section of it, and the fox is on the increase. On Broad and Little Swift creeks they are now very annoying. If a goose, turkey, duck or chicken gets beyond speaking distance of the house, it is not apt to return. We remember an exciting scene when a boy connected with fox hunting, Gaston, Worthington, Blackledge, Sparrow, Caccort and others were in the woods, chasing with a large pack of hounds, a fox and being pushed to desperation, he made for the town. Down Neuse road, first to Queen street, then down Queen to New street, and down that came the fox in the lead, with the dogs in full cry and the hunters on horses near up, urging them on. It happened to be recess at the Academy and about one hundred boys joined in chase as the fox came by. It started the town, the noise made by the dogs and hunters. The fox turned off just beyond the Presbyterian church and saved himself under a stable on a lot now the garden of Geo. Allen, Esq. Of course Reynard had been a night prowler and there before. That day he was jumped some miles in the country. But so much sport in so short a time was never before engaged in by the boys, and all regretting the chase was so soon over. It was proposed to rip up the floor of the stable, but the hunters finally concluded, as the fox had shown unusual gameness and endurance he was entitled to rest, thus was not further disturbed. I do not believe we have the red fox in our county. They were first brought from England to some of the Northern States many years ago and have been since gradually going South. I have seen them in Wake county. In the days of Washington, and he was a fox hunter, near Mount Vernon was a black fox often chased though never caught. The color, no doubt, was accidental. A year or two ago the writer was riding along the road about eight miles below New Bernes. Coming to a running branch, stopped in it to allow the horse to drink; soon a fox came in the road meeting me. Casting his head up, took a survey of the situation and commenced lopping water within twenty feet of the horse. Now and then he would pause, raise his head and listen, then drink again. We soon heard the dogs, the fox mounted a rail fence that crossed the branch on one side and running on it to the end on the opposite side, he jumped as far he could in the road and ran back through the water in the branch and within reach of my whip, though I did not use it, being willing to give him a fair chance for his life. He mounted the fence again, crossing the branch as before, and this time he sprang out in the field and cleared himself. The dogs coming up, after scenting about for awhile, one went along the fence, rearing up on it at different places, soon striking the trail and giving the cry, the pack took it and ran off where the fox jumped in the field. I never knew the result of the chase, whether Reynard finally out-witted them or not. He seemed to know I was not his enemy on that day at least. The writer was at Mr. Henry Thompson's in Stantonburg not long since, and there met a lady who informed me that a day or two before her husband was fox hunting with his pack and had been chasing a fox until it was nearly exhausted. He was standing near his horse and buggy in an open field when the fox discovered him, ran up and fell at his feet. It was taken up and put in the buggy, the dogs in a few moments coming up, the fox was thus saved and she had him home in excellent condition. Here was exhibited instinct equal to reason. In the last resort he threw himself at the feet of the hunter. He knew with the dogs it was certain death, with the man he might escape, and did, with his life. But Reynard has no mercy with the fowls in the barn yard and he might say neither does men that prey upon everything from a little bird to an elephant for sport or to gratify his appetite. W.

An Important Element

Of the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is the fact that every purchaser receives a fair equivalent for his money. The familiar head-line "100 Doses One Dollar," stolen by imitators, is original with and true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla. This can easily be proven by any one who desires to test the matter. For real economy, buy only Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists. 1
