At 3 o'clock the argument began; it was opened by Armistead Jones for the prosecution. He attacked Boyle's testimony, and said that it was both unnatural and improbable that any girl would act as he had sworn Geneva Whitaker did act. He also attacked the testimony of Charles Young, Boyle's servant. He insisted that there was no doubt of the outrage, and there were plain proofs of violence entirely incompatible with consent.

R. H. Battle opened argument for the defence and spoke an hour and a half. He argued that if Boyle were drunk, as prosecution claim, he could not have been able to have entered into a conspiracy with Charles Young to decoy Geneva to his room. He insisted that the evidence showed consent and not outrage.

Inquiries made tonight showed that public opinion is divided as to Boyle's guilt.
