THE REAL SECRET OF THE UNPARALLELED SUCCESS OF THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is its daily paper for busy people. The people of the busy West appreciate keenly the necessity of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily news, but they are too busy to waste valuable time in searching through a cumbersome "blanket" newspaper for the news they want. It is an opportunity, science, religion, politics, and the most interesting and one thing which makes modern civilization. They want news—all the news, but they don't want to read it. It is an opportunity, science, religion, politics, and the most interesting and one thing which makes modern civilization. They want news—all the news, but they don't want to read it.

THE DROWNING FAY.

W. C. DOWLING.

A poem thou hast asked me to write thee, As if I was Byron or Moore; Should the muses decline and slight me, I'll the groves of Parnassus ignore. But I'll steal up the side of the mountain, No goddess, I hope, to provoke; There is one standing now near that fountain— Had I but a tongue to invoke!

"Fair, kind goddess of Poesy! listen! I crave thy sweet aid for a time;— Refuse me, and my eyelids will glisten. With tear drops,—for want of a rhyme."

"For a fair one on earth having asked me To write her—a something or nought; So, please help me to do what she's tasked me, And I'll ever seek thee for advice."

"What's the subject she'd have thee to write on?"

"What measure of all she'd prefer?"

"She said naught of measure; but I might, on 'Our first set together,' suit her."

"Or on anything else I should think fit, Which gives a wide scope to my pen,— Provided thou'll permit me to ink it, By favor of thine, now and then."

"The subject I have already chosen;— 'Tis of a bewildering Fay,— Who was drowned in a river,—I dozing Besides it,—sat singing a lay."

"So, please help me to tell the quaint story; And what shall I name it, I pray?"

"I'll assist thee, but for my own glory, And name it,—The Drowning Fay."

While the goddess is smiling, I hasten My unsteady pen 'over the task; When completed I beg thee to listen, Forget then who wrote it, I ask:

THE DROWNING FAY.

I was sitting near the river's side, Watching the foaming, heaving tide; The waters acted mad, as 'mid the wild Swept on their course, 'neath the wild wind's play.

I was singing a song—a song to myself; Not thinking of fairy, sprite, nor elf— A song of the sweets the loved earth has, And the sweetest thing that ever was.

The most of my song I made as I sung, Which the winds caught up and hurried along— To fairland, and brought there from A fay that could hear and was not dumb (I sang)

They tell me that, of sweet on earth, 'For when it buds and blooms, then dies, Its perfume's wafted to the skies. 'Who is it tells thee that, I pray?'

Asked a golden-haired, bright-eyed fay, And down she dropped in the foaming spray,

Which made me quickly stop my lay. I answered not; but a branch I drew From a tree, and in the waters threw. The end I held in my hand was small. 'Twas then I spoke to the fairy tall. 'Stand thou upon this bough, and try To keep thy eyebrows high and dry! For fairies all, whether short or tall, Or whether they are large or small, So long as they their eyebrows keep From getting wet—though in the deep, Will never drown, so says their code. Made, and revised, as queen Mad rode Upon a rose leaf to the moon, 'On errand for a love-stuck loon. The fairy looked at me and laughed, As on the end of the branch she sat, Which oft I tried to draw ashore,— And strove again, once more, once more; But not a jot did move it—that. I seemed to know so much, thought she,

'Twas best to sit and look at me; And sat there 'mid the foaming spray While I on shore sang out my lay. They tell me that, of sweets on earth, The sweetest thing is a rose-bud's birth, 'For when it buds and blooms, then dies, Its perfume's wafted to the skies.— 'Who is it tells thee that, I pray?'

Asked again the bright-eyed fay, I answered not; but sung this:— There is no part of mortal bliss, No sweet on earth, to me so sweet— As face of her whose love-look's great. My half-shut eyes, as I recline As ease, 'neath shade, in summertime I sang— and turned my face away,— Nor thought of fairy sitting there.

And when I finished thus my lay, And turned to look at the sweet fay, She'd lost her seat and wet her hair. Then, down she went, and up she rose; No use the bough was any longer, And down, and up, and down,—the close Of her career was near. And stranger, Wilder, madder, more furious, too, Howled the wind, and roared the wave 'Round the spot where, from my view, The fay sank downward to her grave! The waters closed, and left no mark. Where the fairy sank 'mid the spray so dark. The howling wind swept 'ver the spot, Where the fairy met with her sad, sad lot!

I heaved me a sigh, and turned away, And, for many and many a long, long day, Did I often think of "The Drowning Fay."

"The rose has one powerful virtue to boast, Above all the flowers of the field; When its leaves are all dead and its colors are lost, A perfume still sweet it will yield."
