> Asheville Citizen: The planting of trees on Mr. Vanderbilt's estate has been discontinued for the present. One hundred and twenty acres have been ploughed up and planted with white pines, which have been arranged in rows seven feet apart with a space of five feet between the trees in the same row. This makes 1,200 trees to the acre. The young trees are from fifteen to eighteen inches in height, and are obtained from Mr. Douglas's nursery at Waukeegan, near Chicago, which is one of the largest in the United States. The white pines which have been set out on the slopes where the timber has been out down, take one year to root them-selves firmly in the soil. The second year they grow about one foot higher. and every succeeding year they receive an additional upward growth of three feet or more. In three years from the time of planting they will be at least six feet in height, and in this climate will attain a maximum height of 150 will attain a maximum height of 150 feet. The idea in planting them so closely together is to make them grow very tall and prevent them from putting forth branches near the ground. One thousand acres are yet to be planted, but by the time lift. Vanderbilt's mansion is ready for occupation the whole mountain side will be covered with dense woods. The sameness of the timber land will be relieved by planting many different kinds of trees at the base of the hills and along the drives.

EDITOR JOURNAL:-A long and intimate knowledge of politics, and the management of campaigns, prompts me to say that the recent railroad canvass and election was the best managed and most actutely conducted of any that I have ever known.

The subordination of anything calculated to excite antagonisms, the clever and admirable measures put in operaby the splendid vote of Thursday, is a monument to the skill of the managers and a triumph of which they have just reason to be proud. It was done with high-toned and gentlemanly methods, and the absence of liquor and similiar adjuncts of popular actions was a marked and pleasing feature.
