TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

SECOND DAY.

The Institute opened at 9 o'clock a.m About thirty teachers answered to their names, with a very striking average of intelligence, brording and culture. Organization was the first subject taken up. The proper classification of pupils was unzed as a prime necessity, as the foundation of all government in the schools. As an indispensable aid to this, it was shown that The Teachers' Institute has a large suitable text books must be introduced, attendance of the public school teachers the product of good scholars, wise thinkers and energetic instructors Teachers were required not to be the slaves of their text books, but their masters. They are to summon to the bar of conscience and heart judgment every theory, thesis and doctrine inculcated in the books. A uniformity of curriculum is to be considered a m plus ultra. Teachers are not to permit their classes to be disflugred by a variety of authors, introducing confusion into recitations, and confounding night at Hancock street Methods, the ambition and industry of pupils.
