Time to Plant Corn.

It is not probable that there will be any more freezes this season, and while some have already planted, for the benefit of those who have not, we re. produce the following bit of advice by W. L. Jones, one of the best and most practical farmers in the South:

DAILY JOURNAL

Corn ought to be planted either early enough to mature before intense summer drouths are likely to overtake the crop, or else late enough to catch the August rains when about ready to eat Mnrch and May are the two months for planting. One can still more probably escape the midsummer drouth by planting an early variety of corn as soon as the weather will permit. Taking it all in all, the golden dent is the best field variety or early corn we have even grown. To get an early maturing crop the seed should be Northern grown-Southern grown seed will not bring the earliest crop; it loses in earliness every year it is planted. Early varieties should never be planted on poor land All early maturing crops must have rich soil, and corn is no exception. The land should also be very thoroughly prepared, and the crop should receive early and frequent working. For the main crop, plant the best common corn of the neighborhood

We prefer to plant the main crop in a shallow water furrow, and gradually work the dirt up to it. This renders received a new Mason & Hamlin ble to lay by the crop with the surface Baby" organ, to be used in the infant flat. But for an early corn it is better to plant on low, flat beds. The soil and the seed will germinate better and the young plants grow off more prompt-Even some of the business men are ly. With large and late varieties, this leaving their offices and running off to growing off rapidly is not desirable; there is too much tendency with them to make stalk at expense of ear. It is the boys play baseball. The Eim Citys even better to have them held back by are getting under pretty good headway a slight nipping of frost.
