POLITICS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

W. H. MARSHALL.

This is what is called an off year in polities; that is, there is no presidential canvass to excite Rev. Peter Roberts, paster of the interest and create enthusiasm.

In the earlier days of the Republic no election was so importaut as the presidential election. The President was the accredited and actual head of his party, and measures were introduced by his friends and supporters that accorded mate, and a marriage was deemed with his policy. Now Congress is advisable, but Roberts had a little the great power of the nation.
