Public Speaking.

As announced there was a public speaking at the court house last night. It might properly be termed the fatroductory discussion on the issues that most conspicuously present themselves in this campaign.

The names of the speakers were s sufficient guarantee of a good audience. First, there was a great desire to know what kind of a speech Hon. L. J. Moore would make since he had cast off his radical garment and joined the lines of the Democratic party. Second, the the honor of going out to hear him.

Mr. Moore first addressed the audience but the lateness of the hour at which the meeting closed prevents anything more than a general notice. His having been a life-long Republican, and one not without honor, he was especially given close attention to discern his object and purpose for becoming a Democrat. This he explained in clear and concise argument and we believe to the satisfaction of every one present. He had no harsh words for his Republican friends for whom he had so ardently fought and aided in his past life, but since he had seen such iniquitous laws passed and urged at the last Congress, whereby the South was humiliated and made to suffer from oppression, he could no longer affiliate with that party. It was a good speech, Democratic, and warmly received.

In the address of Mr. Simmons the same close observance was given. He imposed a just reproval to those who show so much apathy and indifference in politics by failing to register and staying away from the polls. Some of the principal questions defining how the government under Republican rule was so formed as to discriminate against the South in impoverishing her people and still further enriching the monopolists and manufacturers of the North were dwelt upon. His remarks on the Alliance were forcible and ingenious, and impressed the necessity of the healing of any differences that might have occurred through that organization. Some splendid licks were given for Democ-
