The Question Solved.

EDITOR EDITOR:-As I have not seen cember 7th, by the Collegiate Institute, given, I will herewith give you as brief a cceptable Xmas the state who is industrious enough to a statement as I can to the problem in coth the oysters from the natural oyster and paper. The 14 rails to the rod is Present. the only basis given to ascertain the answer; therefore mensuration is the only rule I can find to solve the case:

One mile 320 rods. Then by multiby 160 the result will be 640 acres to the square mile. Then by taking one side of the square mile and multiply 330 14 the number of rails to the rod, we get a result of 17920 rails around the equare mile. Then by taking the 17920 rails and divide by 640 the number of rods multiplied by 8960 rods and dimultiplied by 4 the number of sides and

The problem can be worked with any number of rails to the rod. For instance 10, 12 or 16, etc. The problem can also be worked with a board fence the boards to be 161 feet long. For ining them to be planted in some of the stance, the fence to be 5 boards high and the boards one rod long, and the number of boards around the field and the number of acres in the field, will be the same. Also any other number of boards, as 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, etc.

Another point is that the number of miles to one side of the unknown square is always double the number of rails or boards to the rod, used in the problem above, the one mile square.

Very respectfully,
H. S. GORDNER. New Berne, N. C., Dec. 17, 1890.
