What good can come by jeopardizing one's life in order to show ne sort of respect for the memory of the dead. Have the living no claims upon us? Surely we can bury our dead with all respect and reverence without going to such extremes, as is often the case. Some show of reform has been accomplished in this direction, but it falls very far short of what is needed. Innumerable cases have occurred where funerals have been death to the living.

We could eite a number of cases We could cite a number of cases | Were mine—how long ago it seems! | where the death could be directly | And now, when age has chilled my traced to these ill advised affairs. It is not only the old men, like Mr. Gladstone, but the young as well, who are the sufferers. When life is extinct, the first thought should be for the living, now that death has claimed the life we have battled to save.

We cannot bring that life back again, but we can restore to health, perhaps, those who are worne and weary with their, perhaps, those who are worne and in Electric Bitters you will find the exact remedy for restoring your nervous system to its normal, healthy condition.
