LORD SALISBURY'S reply to Secretary Wharton's note of the 8th inst., was received last Monday and was the subject of a lengthy Cabinet meeting. The contents of the reply are kept secret, but it is understood that it is very unsatisfactory to this Government.

FIRE broke out in the folding room of the House of Representatives Tuesday evening and before it was extinguished probably 10,000 volumes of valuable reports were destroyed. No damage was inflicted to the building, the loss being confined almost entirely to documents.

THE Republican campaign managers in Washington are credited with circulating a "larifari" as part of a campaign of education. The people, however, have finished their education in that branch of instruction. They know the tariff better than a book. It was appropriate, though, that a work of fiction should have been the chosen means of propaganda.

It is reported that Captain R. B. Peebles has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Attorney-General.

Other candidates for the nomination are Frank Osborne of Charlotte, Colonel Paul B. Means of Cabarrus, Ed. Chambers Smith of Raleigh, and C. L. Pettigrew of Plymouth. All are very prominent politicians, having strong following in their own sections.

"SENATOR HILL" has returned from his Southern electioneering tour, but, notwithstanding that he indulged in almost daily speech-making, if he has told the people of the South anything new it has never been made public. Instead of instructing them on the living issues of the day—tariff reform and silver—he merely recited the old, time-honored principles of the Democracy with which his hearers had been perfectly familiar long before they ever heard of him. These he urged the Southern Democracy to stick to. They propose to do so and vote for Grover Cleveland."

When they came up with the fleet, all the boats were lying together (it being too calm for them to dredge), with the oyster police boat Tangier, Capt. Alfred Read, lying alongside to protect the dredgers.

One of the sloops made fast to the police boat. Captain Read ordered them off their lines. They refused. He cut them and set the boat drift. Hot words ensued between the two captains. One of the Tangier men tried to shoot Captain Read, but Capt. Connerton knocked the gun out of his hand.

Read now turned his cannon upon the Tangier Islanders and began to pour grape and canister into their boats. The Islanders, who were all armed, returned the fire, which now became general. The dredgers now came on deck and opened fire on the Islanders.

Captain Connerton stood at the wheel of his boat and steered her right alongside the Virginia oyster-police boat, while the latter was pouring volleys after volleys upon her. The Islanders finally withdrew and made for Tangier. Both the island boats had been badly damaged by the fire from the police-boat. Captain Thomas D. Dies, commanding the schooner Calhoun, one of the dredging boats, was shot in the breast and has since died of his wound. Several Islanders were struck.

While it was going on the entire population of the island, amounting to about 1,000 people, stood on the beach, and with streaming eyes and bated breath watched the battle from afar. During the entire night hardly any one slept. Great excitement still prevails, and it feared that hostilities will break out afresh.

A messenger arrived after the fight, carrying the order for bidding the dredgers to take up the planted oysters.

Coming and Going.

Mr. J. M. Patrick, of Institute, came down and is visiting his daughter, Mrs. J. M. Hines.

A Fortune Wants an Owner.

The News & Observer tells of an unclaimed $3,000,000 legacy in England. The heiress whose the fortune is seeking, is Miss Mary Puttick, one of the graduates of St. Mary's school at Raleigh, who afterwards taught school at La Grange or Kinston, and who, according to the most trustworthy information gained by the lawyers thus far, married Mr. William Saunders, of Smithfield, and is now thought to be living at Spinola, N. C.

She is the daughter of Mr. James Puttick, an Englishman of very superior education and intelligence who was in business as a stone cutter in Raleigh during the war and died there soon after its close.

Put "New Berne, N. C." on Your Shipments.

Every day the railroad and steamer lines take away from here many boxes of fish. Nearly every one of them has the name of the shipper and the name of this stencilled on it in large letters. It pays our fish dealers to put this on because it advertises their business. A few truckers who take special care in gathering, sorting and packing their crops follow the same plan and pride themselves on it.

Others might do likewise with benefit to themselves and advantage to the city. It would be an excellent method of familiarizing people with the name of the city and the vastness of its industries.

OYSTER TROUBLES.

Battle in Chesapeake Bay—Captain of a Schooner Killed.

According to a special dispatch to the Richmond Dispatch from Tangier, Va., they are having hot times in Chesapeake Bay over the innocent oyster.

Tangier Island Oyster men claimed that an oyster-planting company, doing business under the name of Morse & Co., who recently entered 800 acres of oyster grounds, had taken up natural rocks contrary to law and disregarded their reservation by dredging on the planted grounds.

Morse & Co. then brought suit against the oyster men, lost it and took an appeal.

In the mean time, acting under a new law, Morse & Co. employed a fleet of twelve schooners to dredge up their planted oyster.

Then the enraged oystermen lodged complaint against them and succeeded in having an order entered declaring their reservation void, owing to the fact that it had been surveyed and staked off by an inspector from another district.

Early Wednesday morning, before this news reached the Island, seventy men from it, under command of Capt. Patrick Connerton, manned two sloops and proceeded to where the company's dredging boat lay at anchor, carrying with them a warrant to arrest the dredgers for violating the law.

When they came up with the fleet, all the boats were lying together (it being too calm for them to dredge), with the oyster police boat Tangier, Capt. Alfred Read, lying alongside to protect the dredgers.

One of the sloops made fast to the police boat. Captain Read ordered them off their lines. They refused. He cut them and set the boat drift. Hot words ensued between the two captains. One of the Tangier men tried to shoot Captain Read, but Capt. Connerton knocked the gun out of his hand.

FROM WASHINGTON CITY.

New Berne Orators and Those of the National Capital Compared—Ordinary Appearance of Some Great Men.

Washington, D. C. March 17th, 1892.

It was our intention to talk a trifle on faith doctors today, but after a few hasty words with the Hon. S. Alexander and learning from him some facts, we were not conscious of before connected therewith. I concluded it would be more satisfactory to see and hear for our self, then give the opinion for all it might be worth. It is hard to realize what seems to be miraculous restoration to health of a diseased and derelicting body. It was so back ago and it will so be unquestionably to the end of time. There will always be a Thomas.

While in conversation this morning, with Mr. Alexander, the splendid and much praised effort in the House of Representatives yesterday, of Mr. Bryan of Nebraska on the tariff was incidentally mentioned. He observed it was not equal to the speech of the Hon. C. C. Clark when contending for his seat in the Senate of North Carolina of this body Mr. Alexander was a leading member at the time either in language, delivery or effect upon the audience. In short he continued, "that was the greatest speech that ever fell upon my ears and, as an oratorical effort, it has never been reached since I have been in Congress in brilliancy of words and graceful and forceful delivery. It was a burst of eloquence from start to finish." He still continued, "the speech of Mr. Bryan was evidently carefully prepared while that of Clark was an extemporaneous effort." Your correspondent could make oath to that or it never would have come from the orator's tongue. No never. Not unlike him both Stanley and Badger preferred speaking volumes to writing a page. It is well to say here Mr. Alexander was not on the side of Clark in the contest for his seat—thus the compliment should be deemed higher and entirely clear of prejudice, coming from an opponent on that interesting occasion.

The uncle of Capt. Alexander, Gov. W. A. Graham once made similar remarks relative to a speech of John Stanly in the House of Representatives of North Carolina, which breathlessly he listened to from the gallery of the Hall. He refers to it in his eulogy on Mr. Badger who was Stanly's cousin.

I wouldn't under existing circumstances have alluded to this matter if we had not deemed its preservation due to those of our children growing up around us and those to follow them in their years after to, it is an honor to the State. The standard must be placed high if we wish to reach a point beyond the ordinary level.

Newbern has continuously, for more than a century possessed one or more orators that could, in ancient times have won the laurel wreath. What we have given calls to mind an effort to apologize to the Rev. Dr. Richard Mason for connecting him frequently in the papers with the by gone. "Stop," said he, "stop, we want you to tell your story while some of us are living then if there should be errors they could be corrected." Certainly a live witness is worth a dozen dead ones. Like charming scenery as is said, viewed at a distance its beauty often vanishes as it is approached; but few great men of which we read, hold up to our expectation when we come near them and we find we have those as eloquent in our midst.

When President Monroe visited Newbern seventy years ago, he was escorted to the Academy Green and introduced there by the courtly John Stanly to our citizens. Coming to an old lady in the most graceful and kindest way he observed, "Mr. President I present now to you one of our most excellent and esteemed friends, Mrs. Harrington of Craven county. The old lady was won—viewing Mr. Monroe, then Mr. Stanly, she exclaimed rather indignantly, "Well I do declare he, meaning the President, is not a man and not near such a good looking one as Lawyer Stanly, at that." The joke was enjoyed, the distinguished guest laughing heartily with the others about him. This calls up another of a similar character. The celebrated John Randolph and John C. Calhoun were accustomed to making annual visits to Nathaniel Mason at his plantation and indeed home in Warren county at one period of their lives. During a visit an old lady, a neighbor, came over especially, to see the eccentric statesman of whom she had been told so many wonderful things. At last in his presence and eyeing him closely with a disappointed expression in her countenance coolly remarked: "I could make a better man with a pumpkin and two carrots." The apprehension of a squall passed away when Mr. "Randolph," who was called that day, was seen conversed with laughter. The old lady was referring, of course, to his physical condition, but not having been far from the truth. How Mr. Mason could ever have reconciled it with consistency a super abundance of which he was famed for possessing, to vote for the war, with England, of 1812, then against the appropriations to prosecute it, is beyond any kind of comprehension. The only reason he ever gave was "some body must watch the treasury." That was not Henry Clay's way of watching it at the time is certain. The vote against that war of Judge Gaston blighted his brilliant political prospects as Mr. Clay proposed it would. It is hard to say if he could have reached the U. S. Senate, yet he would not surrender his seat on the Supreme Court bench to undertake again the uncertainty of political life with its doubtful honors. Snow upon snow.

The Goddess of Liberty on the Capitol over looking the avenue under her care was unscathed again in an immaculate robe before noon and Chief Justice Marshall sitting in front of the Capitol, as if unveiling some knotty law case, was wearing a garment as white as snow—this and as pure as was his patriotism in the days that gave birth to this now great country.

Truck Farming.

The importance of truck farming in the United States is made manifest by the statistics furnished in a bulletin issued by the census office. From this we learn that there are upward of $100,000,000 invested in this growing industry and that the annual product reaches a value of over $135,000,000. Truck farming, according to the authority quoted, occupies 531,440 acres of land and employs 216,765 men, 9,254 women and 14,874 children, aided by 75,886 horses and mules and $9,971,366 worth of implements. Cabbage, which covers the largest acreage of truck, occupies 11,074 acres. Celery is named as the most expensive kind of truck for the farmer, and at the same time the most profitable.

The suggestion of the Washington Progress that the Wilmington Road build a branch line from Washington to New Berne meets with hearty approval here. One of our business men remarked when he read it that he had always wanted a railroad from here to Washington, and he hoped the matter would be agitated till the road was secured.

The Globe tells of the death through whiskey of Simpson Copeley, a farmer living close to Durham. He imbibed so much that he was in a very maudlin and demoralized condition, and while going along the railroad track in the direction of his home was overtaken opposite Carr Church by the freight train and ground to atoms under the wheels of the locomotive.

Mr. F. S. Brookman, College Secretary of the International Committee of Y. M. C. A., who has been visiting the various colleges in the South is enthusiastic over the work at Davidson College. The suit brought by Josiah Turner against the late W. W. Holden for damages for his imprisonment by Holden in 1870 is now coming to trial at Hillsboro. The notable suit was brought about sixteen years ago, and then a judgment for $7,000 was obtained. Later there were various suits and then attempts were made to levy on the late ex-Governor Holden's property in Raleigh. His case now up at Orange Superior Court, hinges on the transfer of some property.
