Nearly all the Southern homesteads were roofed with shingles of these trees, and a good part of the Virginia houser had their shingles out of the Dismal Swamp. The greatest difficulty with which these slaves had to contend was the soggy condition of the soil, which was not strong enough to hold the weight of a man, and the wheels of the cart sank deep into the mire. The further they penetrated the swamp the greater this difficulty appeared to grow, until at last they re-sorted to the expedient of digging a water course or ditch large enough to The same channel, and many more stoke. #### GRMAT FORESTS.

GREAT PORSSYS. There are very few cultivated spots on the canal after leaving Great Bridge, where the lock is situated. For ten miles the steamer passes through a vast, unbroken forest, the tall straight trees of which stand like sentinels, so still are they. The ground beyond its bank of the canal is low and marshy, and is covered with a low mass of tangled vince, which are part of the time in r miles in length, makes a total of rteen miles of canal proper. The al is owned by a company, of which Franklin Weld is president, with dquarters in Norfolk. As there is not yet been penetrated beyond the head of the canal and nobody could guess how the men had entered the swamp shead of them. Investigations followed, and a peculiar coincidence of the work was discovered. The landowners in North Carolins, on the southern boundry of the swamp, had also been using the cypress and juniper trees, and they had likewise adopted the method of digging a ditch to float the logs to market. Shingles and lum-ber had been transported for years down through the North Carolina dis trict, and the two sections of the canal had now nearly met. Only a shor piece of the uncleared swamp inter vened. The result was that a perfec canal running through the center of the Dismal Swamp was completed. In the course of time the State of Virginia took an interest in the canal, and a ditch was cut through the swamp to Lake Drummond, not for the purpose of boats, but simply to supply the canal with sufficient water at all seasons of the year to transport boats. The Dismal Swamp Co. was formed, and the stock of the company reached a very
