Washington, an important town, to which point the propeller Albemarle, of the Old Dominion Steamship Co., and the propeller Vesper, of Clyde's line, run from Norfolk. It is 83 miles from Hatteras Inlet and is next to Newberne a important town, in its commercial importance. Its wharves may be reached with eight feet of water at almost any time. NEWBERNE STEAMERS.

Newberne, "The City of Eins," is magnificently situated on the Neuse River, fifty miles from its mouth, on a point of land where the Trent joins the leuse. To this point runs the propeller Newberne, of the O.D. Line, from Nor Newperie, of the O.D. Line, from Nor-folk, the propellers George H. Stout and defiance from Baltimore and Nor-folk, and the propeller Neuse from Eli-zabeth City. Up the Trent River runs the propellers Trent and R. E. Lee, and up the Neuse the steamers L. A. Cobb Ind Kinston. It is not generally known, but before steam navigation had yet been com-menced on the James River, or a regular boat plied between Norfolk and Baltimore, a steamboat ran between Newberne and Elizabeth City. This was the Norfolk, belonging to the Newberne Steamboat Company, and during the year 1818 she plied regularly between the two places. She was afterward (in 1819) taken to Norfolk, and ran between Richmond and Norfolk, connecting at the latter place with the New steam-boat Virginia for Baltimore. She ran for ten or fifteen years after on Chesapeake Bay.

On the south side of the Neuse River the New Berne and Beaufort Canal, six miles long, affords passage for vessels drawing not over 5 feet, to the towns of Beaufort and Morehead City. The Newberne increased her speed when we left North Landing River and struck the Government Channel, which rune through the head of Currituck Sound, and when the full speed bell had been rung and the familiar plash of the propeller wheel was nocelerated the Tahoma ceased to gain on us, as she had been doing for an hour and a half. Olyde's propeller George H Stout now hove in sight and passid very close to us. She was on ner way to Norfolk from New Berne. The tug Juniper, with a raft, also the freight propeller Flors, with the Eric canal bot Boheu in tow, both heavily loaded, were also passed about the same time. It is not many miles across the head of Ourfinek Sound to the point where the Coinjock cut of the gamal com-mences. The Government' buildings where the gas for the sound lights is made is situated here, and the side wheel lighthouse tendar Jesamine was at the dock as we passed through this canal does not consume more than an hour, but it is an interesting trip.
