Permit me to say in my judgment and in the judgment of a large majority of the busijudgment of a large majority of the business men on the line of the road, that this would be a very wise move upon the part of the management. It would not be expected to make any money for the first mouth or two, if it barely paid expenses, there would be nothing lost. But it would most assuredly pay in the end. I have always contended since the matter was first agitated, that it would pay.

The Arch of New Berne Cemetery.*

BY CORINNE OAKSMITH

EDITOR JOURNAL: - The following lines were written by Miss Corinne Oaksmith who was drowned by the upsetting of a boat in Beaufort barbor on the 4th of July, 1879. She was the grand daughter of the distinguished poetess, Mrs. Eliza-beth Oaksmith. This young lady was then in the early morn of lite and gave promise of a great literary future. She was exceedingly beautiful and talented, and also a rare poetical genius as these lines will abundantly testify. They are of great beauty, the measure is excellent, electoral vote of the State for Harrison and they breathe the very essence of true poetry.

Stranger, approach with reverend tread The hallowed New Berne ground Where rest her loved and cherished dead In the long sleep profound, But pause ere then dost enter there-Beneath the sacréd wall. And heed the benediction That falleth there 5 : all Falling, still forever falling, From the stone archold and grey, There are spectral tears appalling Throughout the night and day Distilling, ever distilling, From the grey and gheatly wall With a wierd and tender thrilling They fall alike for all.

To me they are tributes hole In which we all may share As silently, ceaseless and lowly For those who are sleeping there. Who have quenched life's feeble fire

Of those texts from that weeping arch Are angels ever there leaning Watching the silent murch (Do they weep for the departed The blest and the broken hearted, And which is the less or gam

To me they seem as a token Of that sweet tountain's brink Our Saylour's love unbroken Where thirsty souls may drink And like to some vague prediction Of some far-off happier march, They fall as a benediction On all who pass the arch Hollywood, N. C., March, 1878.

*This stone arch over the entrance the cemetery is continually dripping water as though weeping for the departed ones who are buried within the walls - Epiron
