Our Fair has been specially fortunate in having men at its head who have by their assiduous care worked up the stock in the Fair to a good par value, and have at all times given the demands of the Fair the same attention they would their own business, and they have always tricksters and sharpers whose presence by driving away otherwise good patrons is calculated to work detriment to, if not the complete downfall of any Fair. In the coming exhibition this rule will be so strictly enforced that not even a cane-rack known as the Riverside House, man will be admitted to the grounds. Besides, being high-toned on this line they have run the Fair on first class business principles. We doubt whether in Another cause is rightly attributable officers have repeatedly advertised the Fair with us on a scale not attempted by anything else in the State, except the advertisements at Intervals we have had from Durham and Winston, showing to Son.
