ST. VALENTINE'S SOLILOUY

O my work is really pleasant, For the heart of prince or peasant I can gladden or can sadden by these essages of mine-Men and women, lads and lasses, Folks of all degrees and classes,

O, they one and all are waiting to receive a valentine. There's the tradesman and the teacher Doctor, lawyer, poet, preacher, And the fair typewriter girl and she "helloes" down the line,

And there's really not a being But can have the fun of seeing How he seems to other people as he view his valentine.

Now and then I send a beauty, But 'tis oftener my duty To prepare a painful missive the receive would decline If he knew that it was loaded, But until it is exploded Why he never once suspects 'tis's comic (f) valentine.

And the postman, how he hates me! And he carnestly berates me s my stock of sentimental stuff weigh down his tired spine: As he trudges on he mutters, Well—suffice to say he utters Words to prove he's not in favor of the tion. The following is the line of heavy valentine.

But the rare and radiant maiden, She whose note with love is laden, Oyshe thinks I'm too awful nice and
kucels before my shrine;
But, alas! for scores of others—
Sisters plain, plainer brothers—
As! they how't speak quits so kindly of the good Saint Valentine.
