The Columbian Era has evolved many works tending to the further progress and development of America, none of which seem to me more worthy of attention than the one set forth in this article. From it you will learn that the women of North Carolina have incorporated "The Virginia Dare Columbian Memorial Association, having in view the double purpose of emphasizing the English coloniza tion of America, and of perpetuating the memory of Virginia Dales the first native white American, by cetablishing in North Carolina a Memorial to her, of an active,

is a proper subject for commendation since woman is recognized

Research has about dispelle much of the pathetic mist which so long enveloped the fate of Virginia Dare. We have proof of her birth and baptism, and historians seem agreed that she grew to woman-lood among friendly Indians, and finally found her way to her own ountrymen at Jamestown.

It is not to be an ornamental statue nor a silent shalt, but an active, lasting benefit to women, such as an Industrial School for girls, because the true elevation of woman rests upon educational development, which shall make her helpful as well as cultivated, strong as well as artistic, womanly as well as scientific.

The women of North Carolina desire specially to emphasize the birth and baptism of Virginia Dare, the first white child born in America of Euglish parents. The history of America presents no conflicting claim. No women came after the colonists to Jamestown.
