That the Smaller Animals Are Subject to Emotional Sensations.-A Wasp's

by some degree of intelligence the most uncomfortable thoughts; for intelligence implies a crowd of sensations from which, as we hoped the lower order of animals were free. That ants and bees and such like have some power of brain might be admitted without unpleasant consequences. No one, in the temperate zone at least, wants to harm them, unless provoked. But to hear that beetles and wasps, spiders and flies are suspected of feeling terror, pain, out of a job-looking for bugs. anxiety and such emotions, is very disconcerting to the kind-hearted. For they have always been treated intentions may be good. Take wasps; who except a Buddhist does not kill them at every opportunity? The bona fides of the Theosophist will hardly stand the test. But Mr. Belt made some observations that startle our complacency. That delightful observer classes of ants in point of intelliwas hunting in his Nicaraguan garden. Before starting for the nest, howmade small circles round, then larger ones, as if taking the bearings. When it had got under way even, it suddenly sped back and repeated these operations, as if upon reflection it did not feel sure that the place was quite fixed in its memory. Returning empty in due time the wasp described but one circle and flew like an arrow to the opening. But the leaf on which it had deposited its prey was obscured by another above, and the wasp, running in, soon lost itself among its observations, buzzing more and more angrily, at length, by chance, it found the morsel, flew straight
