The Parson of Cinnamon Gulch

By WILLIAM SINGLETON

It was Sunday in the mining camp on Cinnamon gulch. But the day was not being respected as in civilized communities.

However, word had been received from the Rev. Arthur Dixon that he had been sent out by a society to start the people on a different course. He was coming among them to remain as long as necessary, which meant to build a place of worship.

About 10 o'clock on this Sunday morning a man came up the gulch whose appearance did not seem to indicate that he was especially fitted for the work in hand. His face was red, he wore a stubble beard, and his apparel was by no means clerical. Indeed, it was the ordinary costume of the country—sombbrero, flannel shirt and trousers tucked in his boots. Taking a position in the center of the cabin, he said in a loud voice:

"Friends, I have come among you to eject Satan from your midst. The sight I see on this Sabbath mornin' is one to appal the heart. Instead of washin' up and puttin' on your best clothes for meetin', instead of mothers brushin' the children's hair and puttin' clean aprons on 'em for Sunday school, some of you are workin', some playin' cards, while the women and children are doin' whatever they take a notion to do."

The stranger paused, and the miners who had been gathering about him while he was speaking wondered. They had expected a sleek-looking, clean shaven gentleman in clerical dress, who would talk to them in a soft, persuasive voice. This man was rough and uncouth—indeed, noisier superior to themselves. However, it is questionable if this very ruggedness did not incline them to receive him more favorably than one more refined.

"I reckon," resumed the newcomer, "that you've been advised of my bein' sent out to convert this camp. I'm the Rev. Arthur Dixon, and I'm purty well used to sich as you. You thought you was goin' to git a smooth talkin' gent with molasses candy hair and mild blue eyes. The society ain't sendin' that kind of men round to do their work, or, rather, the Lord's work. Them kind is sent to places where there's been some sort o' cultivation."

"What I'm goin' to do is tussle with the devil and throw him out, just as when a man's goin' to plant he gits rid o' the stumps and weeds and all that. Them fancy parsons wouldn't be no good for that. Their work comes in when the seed's planted and springin' up. When one o' them fellers comes yere I goes on to another place where there's no clearin'."

By this time the whole camp—men, women and children, though there were few women and fewer children—were standing in front of the parson, gaping at him. To one or two who found room in his rear he said savagely:

"You galoots come forward where I kin see you. That's one o' Satan's best dodges—to git in a feller's rear and take him from behind."

Those addressed came forward.

"Now, I want you people to understand," the parson continued, "that the first thing needed in bringin' about a new deal is that when you get together for purposes o' worship you do it with humility. There's no humility in a six shooter nor in a knife. I want every one of you that has weepsons on you to take 'em up there"—pointing to an open space between trees—"and leave 'em there durin' these yere religious ceremonies."

The speaker paused, and a number of the men went to the spot he indicated and then threw down their weepsons. When he was satisfied that all the arms were where he had ordered them deposited he said that the first thing to do in the premises was to build some sort of place where they could meet for religious worship. Then he nominated one of the men to pass around the hat for contributions.

While the collection was being taken up a young man of a different type came into the camp, approaching the parson from the rear. When he caught sight of the speaker he opened his eyes. He was especially interested in his remarks made from time to time exhorting the miners to contribute liberally.

The collector, having gone the rounds, took the hat to the parson, who emptied the contribution into his pockets, then, drawing a revolver from each boot, covered the assembly.

"Stand where you are," he said, "for I'll put a hole in any one that moves! Any man leavin' for them weepsons won't get more'n a yard!"

He began moving away from the congregation, keeping his face toward them, and backed right into the man who had just come upon the scene. Feeling a pair of arms clasping him about his body, he wriggled to get away, but to no purpose. Presently one of the congregation, taking advantage of the diversion, jumped in and grasped the weepsons. That ended the dispute. The so-called parson was downed and securely bound.

The young man who had turned the tables was the real Arthur Dixon. The man who had personated him had met him and learned of his purpose. Hurrying on ahead of him, he had hoped to play his game and get away with the plunder before his arrival.

The real Dixon in saving the miners from robbery secured a report that enabled him to do a week's work. He revolutionized the camp.
