Additional appreciation might be won by it if the weather bureau would employ a few journeyman poets to put into rhyme its daily flights of fancy.

Animals that fly are similar to the aeroplane, says Garret P. Serviss; to which he might have added that some aeroplanes are similar to animals that don't.

The New York supreme court has decided that aviation is a hazardous undertaking. It hardly needs a decision from a high judicial source to tell us this.

And now the faddists are advocating that when married the wife retain her maiden name. What's the matter? Don't they get it back soon enough anyway?

The boss of the works is always surprised, when he returns from a vacation, to find how well things have been running along without him. But he never admits it.

Japanese officials who graft and are caught with the goods are invited to commit hara-kiri. In this country grafting officials often tell their accusers to "go jump into the lake."

A French engineer has just descended 600 feet from an aeroplane by means of a parachute; had he been sailing upside down, goodness only knows where he might have landed.

Money spent in the United States every year for providing caskets for funerals for cats and dogs would keep hundreds of men, women, and children from the keenest suffering and starvation. Dumb animals should be treated with kindness, while they are alive and dependent on us, but these gratuitous post-mortem exhibitions are nauseating as they are useless.
