To Tell Daniels, etc.

Icopholes in a brick warehouse opposite the landing. It was a single volley of infantry fire. Mr. Daniels was instantly killed in the pilot house; McChesney was seriously wounded and several others on the upper deck, including myself, slightly wounded. The boat was headed down the river as rapidly as possible and as we got in midstream the federal men aboard took refuge and returned fire. I think the Confederates retreated to Tranters Creek, where the force of which they were a part was stationed. Captain Gray of the Georgia troops, who occupied the warehouse, had intended to capture the boat without firing a shot I have since learned from a reliable source, that a nervous man prematurely discharged his piece, starting the general fusillade which wrought havoc with the boat's crew and passengers.

"It was a most unfortunate event. Mr. Daniels, who was just entering upon the prime of life, was a quiet, high-toned gentleman, courteous in the extreme, and esteemed by all who knew him."
