Two Soldiers Are Fined Here In 'Dead Man's Curve' Wreck

Two soldiers were convicted on several traffic violations in Recorder's Court Tuesday as a result of offenses that climaxed with a wreck on "dead man's curve" on the old Durham Road Saturday afternoon.

The pair — en route from Ft. Benning, Ga., to new stations at Ft. Campbell, Ky., — were stopped in Wake County early Saturday for passing on a hill. Cpl. Orma Ford McRae, 23, was taken to the Cary police station along with his companion, Cpl. David Valdez, for booking on this charge.

They apparently slipped away from the station before the citation was completed, and an alarm was sent out over the Highway Patrol radio network for them. Highway Patrolman E. S. Robinson of Chapel Hill spotted the 19-52 souped-up Olds "88" a short while later near White's service station on the old Durham road after it had outrun a Wake patrolman.

When Mr. Robinson sounded his siren the fugitive auto roared off eastward down the old Durham highway. Rounding "dead man's curve" at the old Alderman gardens at about 90 miles an hour, according to the patrolman, the car rolled over on its side several times and landed in a bean patch on the outside of the curve. Neither of the occupants was hurt seriously, but the auto was demolished.

Cpl. McRae was charged with careless and reckless driving, speeding 90 miles an hour, and failing to stop for a siren. Cpl. Valdez was booked for aiding and abetting on all of these counts. Both were released on $500 bond apiece.

The two pleaded guilty before Judge William S. Stewart here Tuesday. On the basis of Patrolman Robinson's testimony McRae was fined $200 and costs and Valdez, costs.

Senator Ervin Says Democrats Will Solve McCarthy Problem

A Democratic majority in the United States Senate following the fall elections will solve the McCarthy committee chairmanship controversy automatically, predicted U. S. Senator Samuel J. Ervin, Jr., recently in a speech before the Carolina Bankers Conference, meeting at the University of North Carolina.

Senator Ervin, who is a member of the Senate Committee on Government Operations, which Senator McCarthy heads, gave his views on the McCarthy situation as well as other internal and foreign affairs.

Referring to recent resolutions introduced in the Senate to remove Senator McCarthy as committee chairman, Senator Ervin said: "Most of the Democrats in the Senate feel that under the Senate rules the question of the continuance of Senator McCarthy in the chairmanship is a matter for the Republican Senators. I cannot find any great quarrel with this thought."

Against Altering Rules
"To alter the Senate rules in this particular case would be about as wise as using an atom bomb to get rid of a mouse," he continued.

Predicting a natural solution to the issue, Senator Ervin said: "If the Democrats achieve a majority, they will take advantage of the Senate rules to reorganize the Senate and appoint a Democrat as chairman in the place of Senator McCarthy."

Mentioning that some Senatorial colleagues have suggested expelling the Wisconsin senator from Senate membership, Senator Ervin said: "It would be a serious blow to Constitutional government in the United States to expel a Senator from membership in the Senate, no matter how greatly the other members of the Senate might deplore his tactics or his views."

Matter For Wisconsin
"The question of retaining or removing Senator McCarthy from Senate membership is, in my judgment, a matter for decision by the people who elected him, namely the people of Wisconsin."

Senator Ervin commented on the committee hearings: "I do not believe that any Senate Committee should be allowed to make investigations into subversive activities unless at least a quorum of the members of the Committee are present."

Turning to foreign affairs, he expressed his firm opposition to admission of Red China to United Nations membership, and his belief that the UN will not "manifest such little character as to admit Red China."

Senator Ervin stated that he has always believed in keeping our na-

Tour Features Recent Users Of Irrigation

Some 100 Orange County farmers saw irrigation in operation yesterday as they toured eight farms in the county with E. P. Barnes, assistant county agent.

The tour, which started at 2 o'clock at Chandler's Store, was formed to show farmers in the county "the results of various irrigation practices and irrigation outfits."

Barnes said that those farmers that have irrigation suffered much less than others during the recent drought, which ended late last week. He said that Orange County expects to have many more irrigation units in operation next year.

"For several years you have suffered severe losses because of drought conditions. During these dry years several farmers throughout the state, as well as the Tobacco Experiment Station at Oxford, have been trying out irrigation."

"For the past four years, the Experiment Station has irrigated tobacco and is showing a net increase of between $250 and $300 per acre per year over the non-irrigated tobacco," Barnes pointed out.

Irrigation units vary in cost from less than $1,000 to several thousand, depending on the land and the farmer's ingenuity. Biggest problem now regarding use of irrigation is the cost. After several years of drought, many farmers in the county can't afford to invest in the units, even though the savings in crop yields would be great. Apparently, some manner of financial help will eventually have to be worked out before many farmers can purchase the much-needed irrigation units.

"Many of the farmers feel they have learned a lesson from the two droughts and are turning toward ponds as a hedge against the weather," Barnes said.

"One of these (irrigation) outfits was put into operation for only a few hundred dollars while others cost several times that amount," he pointed out.

5 More File Accounts Of Primary Costs

Five more candidates in last month's Democratic primary election filed their expense accounts with the clerk of the Superior Court.

The five—N. B. Berry, G. P. Sykes, L. T. Hopkins, Fred T. Reitzel, and Donald M. Stanford—bring the total to 12, which leaves seven who haven't filed. State election laws require all candidates to file a preliminary account of campaign expenses 10 days before the election and a final report 20 days afterward.

Berry listed five dollars expenses with no contributions; Sykes, $15.20 with no contributions; Hopkins, $35 with $30 contributions; Reitzel, $32.68 with no contributions, and Stanford, $35.10 with no contributions.

According to law, the candidates who didn't file are subject to prosecution by the solicitor.
