Mr. Durham feels an "all-out effort" must be made to apply atomic energy to peaceful purposes. "We can't afford to let the nations of the world drift into an atomic war," he said. The "Atoms for Peace" program, he said, "should be followed up by all means.

Must Educate Physicists

"To say ahead," Mr. Durham said, "We're got to turn our efforts toward educating physicists" in the peaceful application of atomic energy. At present, N. C. State College is the only institution which teaches atomic physics with its atomic reactor. At least 11 other universities and private groups have proposed research reactor programs. Among them are California, Pennsylvania State College and J. A. Jones Construction Company, a North Carolina concern.
