In Homicide And Suicide—Why?

The world seems all out of whack when you walk onto a murder scene.

So it was in the humble dwelling of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Cass Jr. on Monday night. Long-time residents of the Lystra community near Farrington, the young couple lived in a small residential neighborhood in the rolling farm country of upper Chatham eight miles south of here.

All day Monday, it seemed, something dead wrong was brewing. Mrs. Cass's sister and next door neighbor—Mrs. Cary Tripp—sensed something was wrong. The 35-year old sawmill worker didn't go to work, and was seen around the community in an intoxicated state.

His wife spent most of the day at her sister's, though her husband drove past them to their two-room cottage several times during the day. A little before supper Mrs. Cass returned home, and shortly thereafter her husband came in. Within minutes murder and then suicide struck the house.

The mute evidence figuratively shouted the tragedy when you entered the tiny bedroom. To the left was the husband—a lanky, balding chap of about 30—still holding the death weapon in his hands as he lay slumped against the dressing table. Across from him on the bed was his wife—killed at close range by a blast from the double-barreled gun.

Her wallet—containing $52 in wages from the Carrboro Mills, was under the pillow and another empty wallet lay on a radio by the bed. In the corner was the television set. And in the other corner the wardrobe closet box completed the furnishings of the room.

In some ways their surroundings bespoke the contributing reasons for their twin deaths. Yet it all seemed so wrong and so unnecessary. Looking on the death scene everyone seemed struck with the tragedy of it—even to the sheriff and coroner, hardened by many similar sights. "Why" seemed to be the unspoken question of the investigators in the tiny room.

"Why"—and the possible answers to this question, was on the lips of the throng of neighbors and the curious who gathered in the front yard and looked in silence as the bodies were carried out to the undertaker's limousine.

PREVENTS LOSS

The Three Most Important Causes Of Fire, Are

Men . . . Women . . and Children

Did you know that only about 10% of the nation's fires are started by natural causes? Did you know that nearly a thousand people per month lose their lives in fires? Did you know that more than a half million dollars in destruction of property occurs in annual fires? Yes, this is the shocking prospect of loss our nation faces each year. But the most shocking aspect of all, is that most of this loss could have been prevented by YOU . . . YOU . . . and YOU.

Fire Prevention is everybody's business . . . every minute . . . every day! Check your home, your job, your car . . . keep them safe from fire hazards. Keep all inflammable waste properly stored or properly burned. Snuff out lighted matches. Watch out for faulty wiring, inflammable liquids, gas leaks, etc. Keep matches out of reach of children. Be sure and you'll never be sorry! And, to guard against losses from fire, carry enough insurance. But, your best insurance always and all ways . . . is FIRE PREVENTION!
