Spanish Dancer Luisillo Was Bullfighter; Here Thursday

Luisillo, star and choreographer of the Spanish revue, "Ballet Espanol," will be presented in Memorial Hall Thursday at 8 p.m., by the Chapel Hill Concert Series. One dollar and $2 tickets are now on sale at the Graham Memorial information desk and will be on sale at the door Thursday night.

Luisillo began his performing career as a bullfighter in his native Mexico and is still an ardent fan of the sport, though he gave up the ring and switched to dancing at the age of 14. Into the finale of the Ballet Espanol he has choreographed a mock bullfight which takes place in a Flamenco Cafe.

ALIKE
Dancing and bullfighting, according to Luisillo, although rarely thought of as alike, actually tax the performer in the same way, both demanding that the artist be agile, light on his feet and have a capacity for hard physical work.

To Americans who believe bullfighting to be a dangerous and cruel sport, Luisillo says, "In Spain, it is considered more sporting to fight with an animal than to put two physically fine males against each other and watch them pummel one another into grogginess."

This and the fact that in bullfighting there is always the chance that human life is at stake are why boxing, wrestling and even football have never been as popular in Spain, adds Luisillo.

Bullfighting, according to Luisillo, is not only a sport but also an art—and a custom that has a tremendous hold on 75 million Spanish speaking people. It has been written about in history as far back as 238 B.C. and he expects that it will continue for many years to come.

Of the "Ballet Espanol," The New York Times said, "Not a dull spot on the entire program. Luisillo is a dancer of rare power—Brilliant footwork. We have not had so good a Spanish show in many a season."
