

Governor Sets Symphony Week Jan. 15

Governor Luther Hodges has designated January 15-22, 1956, as Carolina Symphony Week. The North Carolina Symphony Society in Chapel Hill announced today.

Through the idea of having a week for tribute to the Carolina Symphony through the State has been considered in the past, the recent designation of the first week that has ever been officially named for this purpose.

During the week, which falls before the orchestra begins its annual spring tour, radio and television stations throughout the State will feature special programs and feature stories will be broadcast in many of the North Carolina newspapers.

At the address by Governor Hodges during the week and will be broadcast by radio and television. Featured speakers during the week will include Dr. Benjamin Swalin, director of the Carolina Symphony, and Russell E. Grum, president of the Society's board of trustees.

Special leaders will be given special recognition by their communities and social events will also be arranged in some communities. The observation of Symphony Week in Chapel Hill will be renewed when the program is completed.
